

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

100

A

28

BS
511
.C52

PROPERTY OF
HARRIS HALL LIBRARY,
NOT TO BE REMOVED

CROWN THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY

VOL. VIII.

CHEYNE'S BIBLE PROBLEMS

Crown Theological Library

WORKS ALREADY PUBLISHED

- Vol. I.—BABEL AND BIBLE. By Dr
FRIEDRICH DELITZSCH, Professor of Assyriology in the University of Berlin. 5s.
- Vol. II.—THE VIRGIN BIRTH OF CHRIST.
An Historical and Critical Essay. By PAUL LOBSTEIN.
3s.
- Vol. III.—MY STRUGGLE FOR LIGHT.
Confessions of a Preacher. By R. WIMMER. 3s. 6d.
- Vol. IV.—LIBERAL CHRISTIANITY. Its Origin, Nature, and Mission. By JEAN RÉVILLE. 4s.
- Vol. V.—WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY? By ADOLF HARNACK. 5s.
- Vol. VI.—FAITH AND MORALS. By W.
HERRMANN. 5s.
- Vol. VII.—EARLY HEBREW STORY. A Study of the Origin, the Value, and the Historical Background of the Legends of Israel. By JOHN P.
PETERS, D.D. 5s.

BIBLE PROBLEMS

AND THE

NEW MATERIAL FOR THEIR SOLUTION

A PLEA FOR THOROUGHNESS OF INVESTIGATION ADDRESSED TO CHURCHMEN AND SCHOLARS

BY

T. K. CHEYNE, D.LITT., D.D.

FELLOW OF THE BRITISH ACADEMY
ORIEL PROFESSOR OF INTERPRETATION IN THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD AND CANON OF ROCHESTER

PROPERTY OF
HARRIS HALL LIBRARY, NOT TO BE REMOVED

1333

WILLIAMS & NORGATE

14 HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON
NEW YORK: G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS

1904

24

J.
St. Andrews Church
4-3-47
=

PREFACE

THE present Volume is an expansion, with elucidatory notes, of the Lecture which I delivered before the Churchmen's Union, at the Church House, on June 16, 1904. It was addressed to Churchmen who took an intelligent interest in the Bible, and wished to know how critical Bible-study was affected by recently discovered facts, but for that very reason it also appealed in a secondary degree to special scholars. For there are notoriously at the present time great differences among scholars, caused by a difference of mental attitude towards new facts. This work is partly an exposition of the new facts, partly a plea for a bolder style of Biblical criticism, justified and invited by those facts.

It may possibly be called a specimen of advanced criticism, but it is not as such that I offer it, for my only object has been to make it as thorough as the occasion allowed. If in order to be thorough I have sometimes been compelled to go beyond my fellow-scholars, such unsought originality may perhaps be pardoned.

Some of the subjects here treated of are closely related to the Christian faith. They have been taken up under a strong but animating sense of responsibility. It will at least be recognized that their tendency is not subversive, but, in so far as the affirmations of the general Christian consciousness are concerned, conservative. Should any one of those whose gift is that of steering the Church find time to look into this book, I would venture to suggest that the part which it most concerns him to test is the account given of these affirmations, because they seem to determine the sense in which ordinary thoughtful Churchmen use certain statements of the Apostles'

Creed. On the other hand, students of the history of our religion will, I hope, take a special interest in the view given of the origin of the forms in which those affirmations are expressed in the Creed. It is hoped that fresh light may have been thrown on the true meaning of the Biblical passages on which these forms of statement are based. Should this be the case, it will be largely due to Professor Gunkel's researches, as summarized in the recent tractate mentioned below. At the same time, it will be clear to the intelligent reader that I have preserved my own independence of judgment even while I learn from him; and I may say once more that on the line which Professors Gunkel and Zimmern have taken as mythologists, I have been to some extent their predecessor and fellow-worker.

In the above I have referred especially to Part II. of the Lecture. In Part IV. I have devoted myself to new facts bearing on the Old Testament. I trust that no one will accuse me of assuming as proved what is still sub judice. I have endeavoured to distinguish between facts, which may be ignored, but cannot be argued away, and the inferences which follow from those facts. At the same time, no one, I hope, will blame me for holding that some of my inferences are too well-founded to be safely denied. Some other facts, for which further evidence is still to be desired, are given in one of the appended Notes.

I have no wish to enter into any of the current theological controversies. In delivering this Lecture, and in expanding it for the press, I have felt myself in a world where "beyond these voices there is peace." But I may perhaps express the hope that the tone, and, in one important respect, the method, of this book may make it useful as a corrective to Mr Mallock's ably written but controversial, and, as I think, in its main conclusions, misleading article, "Free Thought in the Church," Nineteenth Century and After, September 1904, pp. 386-401.

To facilitate study I have prefixed a Summary of the Contents of the Lecture, giving those of the first two parts with special fullness. May I add the request that the Notes may be perused by those who are interested in the Bible with not less care than the Lecture?

CHIEF ABBREVIATIONS

Schöpfung. Schöpfung und Chaos in Urzeit und Endzeit.
Von H. Gunkel. Mit Beiträgen von H. Zimmern.
Göttingen, 1895.

Verständniss. Zum religionsgeschichtlichen Verständniss des Neuen Testaments. By the same Author. Göttingen, 1903.

K.A.T. Die Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament. Von Eberhard Schrader. Dritte Auflage, mit Ausdehnung auf die Apokalypsen, Pseudepigraphen, und das Neue Testament. Neu bearbeitet von Dr H. Zimmern und
Dr H. Winckler. Berlin, 1902-1903.

Offenbarung. Die Offenbarung Johannis (in Meyer's Kommentar). Von Wilhelm Bousset. Göttingen, 1896.

SUMMARY OF THE LECTURE

PART I

THE subject of critical Bible-study is large and important, but dangerous. First of all, therefore, we must survey the situation, and fortify students by showing them an ideal of character. The appeal of Huxley in one of his Lay Sermons in 1870 has a lesson for to-day. It was the clergy who opposed science, and the clergy were mistaken. So too afterwards the clergy were opposed to the Higher Criticism of the Old Testament, and the best of the clergy had to confess themselves mistaken. So far, so good. But there was a deficiency in this act of justice. The Higher Criticism of the New Testament was practically set on one side, and those who sought to do critical work were beset with exhortations to be sober, cautious, moderate, etc., with results most unfavourable to thoroughness in the work.

12 Summary of the Lecture

Evidently the opponents had caught no glimpse of the high ideal of the true historical critic of the Bible. It is important, therefore, to sketch the ideal critic here. It must, however, be admitted, not only that such a critic has not appeared among us, but also that the existing criticism has not aimed high enough. The admission may well inspire sadness, and since all thoughtful Churchmen share the responsibility with the critics themselves, the Lecturer thinks that his own melancholy may be shared by some of his hearers. A High Churchman, however, has provided unconsciously for our case. "Heaven must be won, not dreamed." There is also a voice and a message for us in the circumstances of the hour, which may well rouse us from our depression. For there is just now a revival of suspicion and denunciation. If criticism is to exist in the Church,—alien though it be to the Church's proper object,—it must at any rate not be free and untrammelled. How shall we answer this? Not by counter-denunciations, but by an appeal to reason. The National Church is large enough to include critics, but if criticism is to exist and prosper, it must be a complete criticism. Why not, indeed? Criticism is one of God's gifts, and, through living in the Church, critics can both give and take much that is precious. The Anglican Church is at once Catholic and Evangelical. Its theological inconsistencies can only be reconciled on the basis of an improved psychology of religion and a free Biblical criticism. Without the latter, at any rate, regarded as the first part of a historical theology, the Church will be unable to re-interpret and re-formulate its doctrines—unable to do what the most thoughtful part of English Christendom imperatively demands of it.

14 Summary of the Lecture

To help to bring this about is the ultimate object of educated, liberal-minded Churchmen. What follows from this? Why, that they may fairly be expected to take note of and encourage more than one solitary type of criticism of the Bible. He who knows only one religion, knows not even that as it ought to be known, and he who knows only one type of Biblical criticism has no vital knowledge even of that. Apart from prejudice, even practical men, if they have any regular leisure time, will find it desirable to read and ponder the works of innovating critics both of the Old and of the New Testament. But it may perhaps be asked, while admitting that the love of truth is not absent from innovating critics, must we not be on our guard against the "wandering lights" that seem to us to beguile them? In answer, it may be said that the probability that any really and fundamentally extreme critics should arise in England or even in Germany is not very great, the power of tradition in both those countries, though doubtless not in the same degree, being so strong. Thoughtful Churchmen hardly need to be warned against English or even German advanced critics on the ground that those critics are so liable to be led astray by "wandering lights." If there be any English innovators, let us be thankful for them. They must be men who, to all that moderate critics are supposed to possess, superadd an acquaintance with new problems and new methods such as those critics lack. And being such men, must they not protest against being condemned on utterly false grounds by critics who have not taken the trouble to understand them?

We are here concerned mainly with English workers, and we can willingly admit their imperfections. Advanced critics may sometimes go too fast, and moderate critics too slowly. For both, honourable excuses may be given. The Lecturer could not wish any student either to ignore or to oppose such truly honest men as our moderate critics, but he warns the student that too many of them have set up a new critical dogmatism or orthodoxy which bodes evil. Before he begins the exposition of some of those new facts on which the wider Biblical criticism of the future must be based, he is bound to defend the new critical movement against the hostility of the new Church militant, not however, by retaliation and censorious criticism, but by a friendly suggestion or offer.

16 Summary of the Lecture

This offer is to do all that can be done, with the co-operation of fair-minded moderate scholars, to promote mutual recognition among Bible students in general. The "necessary hostility" decreed by some impetuous persons on the moderate side would, if this offer be accepted, have to be broken off, and the imitation of such partisanship on the part of the more headstrong advanced critics would be precluded. A place of honour would have to be found for all who have done good work from any critical point of view, and such mutual recognition would extinguish narrowness and conduce to the general progress. Only thus, as it would seem, can the present ominous misunderstandings be removed. Of this offer the hearers or readers of the Lecture are witnesses. They too, not less than the scholars referred to, are concerned with the reception of this proposal, for it is one object of the opponents of the advanced critics to prevent these from exercising any appreciable influence, at any rate by their writings, on English Bible students, at the universities or elsewhere.

PART II

The Lecturer, having done his best to loosen prejudices, now turns to his special theme. Not light-heartedly, for the Anglican Church is more suspicious of research than was the older Latin Church, and also because of his own share of human liability to error. He begins with the New Testament. There are certain important facts which are still new to most students, or, if not almost new, yet too commonly misunderstood. The Lecturer claims the right to make this criticism, because facts of this order in another part of the field have long been one of his special studies.

18 Summary of the Lecture

This requires a slight digression to the Old Testament. There is not inconsiderable evidence, both in Genesis and elsewhere, of the influence upon the Israelitish mind of an Oriental mythology of Babylonian origin. This evidence exists sometimes in mere phrases, but sometimes also in forms of belief and in detailed narratives. The more important of these clearly show that the higher religious guides of Israel deliberately adopted these imaginative, non-historical, but from the very first deeply significant representations as the repositories of spiritual truths. Conservative theologians will have to admit that the New Testament now has to be studied from the point of view of mythology as well as from that of philological exegesis and church-history.

Summary of the Lecture 19

The similarity of the New Testament to the Old, though not at all complete, is yet quite sufficient to justify and require this. There are no doubt various branches of New Testament study which are beginning to be regenerated, but for that harmonious combination of points of view which is necessary for the due comprehension of the New Testament, it is essential that the help of mythology, treated of course by strictly critical methods, should be invoked. In short, there are parts of the New Testament—in the Gospels, in the Epistles, and in the Apocalypse—which can only be accounted for by the newly-discovered fact of an Oriental syncretism, which began early and continued late. And the leading factor in this is Babylonian.

But is it safe to take this line of criticism? The answer is that if it is safe in the case of the Old Testament—and experience proves that it is—it must also be safe in that of the New. Moreover, even from an apologetic point of view, some new line must be adopted.

20 Summary of the Lecture

For it is probable that the prevalent scepticism partly arises from our insistence on the inseparableness of the form and the spiritual contents of certain very prominent New Testament statements. It is essential that Church-teachers should prepare for a radical change in their methods. The course at present taken is scientifically wrong, and seems inconsistent with a rich and buoyant faith in God and confidence in truth. Liberal Roman Catholics already see this clearly, and the Lecturer quotes the Baron von Hügel, as a prominent representative of their school, to prove this fact. Historical phenomena must be tested by history, but the Church is sure that facts enough will remain for the needs of religion, and historical criticism justifies this assurance.

Among the more peculiar and difficult New Testament statements are those concerning the Virgin-Birth of Jesus Christ, and concerning His descent into Hades, to which, as hardly less difficult to the lay mind, those respecting His Resurrection and His Ascension may be added. A trained historical and psychological critic can take up such a subject calmly, not from any want of reverence, but because he knows that the question of questions is quite different from that which the "man in the street" and even the controversial essayist suppose, viz., What was there in the personality of Jesus which led early disciples to identify Him with the Christ, the Son of God?

As to the Virgin-Birth. The silence of the Gospels, apart from the Preludes to our Matthew and Luke (the latter of which may not be in its original form), is in itself sufficiently startling. But we must not pause now to discuss this question, for a more interesting one claims our attention. It has often been said that the statement in Matt. i. 18 has a mythological basis. But the theory has been generally offered by men out of sympathy with the Church, and has not hitherto had a sufficiently perfect critical form. Let it be seen that the myth from which the statement in Matt. i. 18 may, with much plausibility, be considered to be drawn was, in very early times, a repository of spiritual truth, and that it existed among the Jews (as a portion of the popular Messianic doctrine) before it became in certain circles Christianized, and the most important objections of conservative theologians will be met. It is the next object of the Lecturer to show this, leaving questions which arise incidentally—such as the meaning of the “Son of man” in Dan. vii. 13, and the character and original position of Michael—to be considered in the Notes.

22 Summary of the Lecture

Among the stories which may reasonably be regarded as parallel to that of the Virgin-Birth are (1) the N. Arabian myth of Dusares, (2) the strange narrative in the Apocalypse (Rev. xii.) respecting the splendidly attired woman in heaven, and the great red dragon also in heaven, together with all that belongs to this wondrous tale, in its origin so evidently Babylonian. It would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of this narrative, the details of which are studied, with the necessary condensation, in the Lecture, and in more detail in the Notes, in which also corroborative Assyrio-Babylonian, Egyptian, and Persian illustrations are brought forward, and the Græco-Asiatic myth of Leto is recorded. In the Notes, too, explanations are given of the beautiful story of the Magi, and of the connected narrative of the Massacre of the Innocents. Nor could the Lecturer omit to refer to the reflection in the Mandæan religious literature of the ancient mythic statement that the Redeemer of the world was the child of the goddess Istar, whose place among the Babylonians was not altogether unlike that of the Virgin Mary in the Christian Church, and to the mythic story of the birth of the Babylonian king Sargon of Agadè. But the hearer or reader is not left under the misunderstanding that the view of the birth and early history of the Saviour is practically the same as that of a Redeemer of the world in Oriental mythology. The borrowed material is treated with much freedom, and the stress laid on the virginity of the Holy Mother is peculiar to the Prelude of the First Gospel, the author of which would doubtless have much disapproved of the title "Virgin" as it was originally understood.

24 Summary of the Lecture

Should anyone still feel dissatisfied, and question whether all this is not simply due to the following of false lights, the Lecturer points to the numerous imaginative stories in the later Jewish literature, and to parallel narratives in the Old Testament itself. Not that the Oriental myth of the Redeemer arose out of the fertile imagination of any individual ; it was of primæval origin, and as necessary a growth of early culture as any other of the most ancient beliefs of mankind, in saying which, however, nothing derogatory can be intended to that true Light, whose rays may be discerned in the most unlikely places.

After considering the spiritual truths of which the statement of the Virgin-Birth may be considered the repository, and to which the assent of the Christian heart is pledged, the Lecturer proceeds to treat in a similar manner the other prominent statements respecting Christ which are difficult to the lay mind. The Descent into Hades is illustrated by the Mandæan story of the Divine Hero who descended into the nether world to fight with the King of Darkness and to liberate the souls of the righteous. Evidently this story is ultimately Babylonian, and closely connected with the primitive dragon-story. Also by the striking and significant Babylonian myth of the Descent of Istar, though here, of course, it is only Istar's dead consort, Tammuz, whom the divine Visitor to the Underworld rescues. Other parallels are also referred to. The difficult passage, 1 Pet. iii. 18 ff., can now be studied more intelligently than before.

It thus becomes possible to explain the Christian belief of the Descent of Christ, and, in connexion with this, the time-reference in Matthew xii. 40, in a satisfactory manner. Nor can it well be denied that the form of the statement of the Resurrection and Ascension of Christ admits of a similar explanation. The mythic parallels do not need to be stated at such length as in the two former cases. But it is hoped that the conclusion is sufficiently justified. Now too we can perhaps explain more fully the New Testament references to Old Testament passages as predictions of the wonderful circumstances of the appearance, reappearance, and disappearance of the Christ.

26 Summary of the Lecture

Throughout this part of the Lecture it is assumed that the form and spiritual contents of the statements are separable. The form is derived from the pre-Christian Oriental and Jewish tradition, and is fit matter for archaeological criticism; the spiritual contents appeal, not to the critic as such, but to spiritual men (whether critics or not), and their mouthpiece is the Church. An attempt is made by the Lecturer to set forth those affirmations of “spiritual men,” i.e. of all who are Christians in their inner life, correctly and sympathetically. If either in the explanation of the form, or in the exposition of the spiritual contents, of these statements, any error has been made, the Lecturer counts on the charity of his hearers or readers to correct him, on grounds not less carefully and critically set forth than those here given.

PART III

In this part of the Lecture certain other facts are adduced, bearing on New Testament study. First, the discovery of a form of the text of Matt. i. 16, which must at any rate be very near the original. Next, an indubitable inference from the form in which Eusebius quotes Matt. xxviii. 19. These are facts of the utmost interest to students of the life of Jesus Christ and of Christian doctrine, and have a special importance just now, when Churchmen are beginning to ask how these great subjects appear in the light of a more thorough and methodical criticism.

28 Summary of the Lecture

PART IV

In this part the Lecturer sets forth the importance of several new problems arising out of new facts (e.g. the problem of the kings in Gen. xiv.; Ur of the Chaldees; Babylonian legal influence; the antiquity of the divine name Yahwè, and of the names Hebrew and Israel, also the Gezer of 1 Kings, and the existence of a N. Arabian Muşri, Kush, and Asshur). To solve such problems we must employ one or both of the two fresh keys to the interpretation of the Old Testament, viz., Assyriology, and an improved textual criticism. New problems and new methods go together, and it is fortunate that in using the latter key undue subjectivity can frequently be restrained by considerations arising out of Winckler's discovery of a N. Arabian Muşri and Kush. There are certain Old Testament passages (a conspectus of them is given in the Lecture) in which these N. Arabian lands must necessarily be referred to, unless indeed exegesis is only another name for obstinate adherence to a less probable opinion in spite of new facts. An appeal is made to students to weigh carefully both the facts and the inferences from the facts here brought to their notice, and to devote a little more criticism to the philological and exegetical theories which are now somewhat too hastily being erected into dogmas. Old Testament criticism is not yet an adult science; there is much work yet to be done, and the traditional form of the Hebrew Scriptures needs a more profound and a more methodical treatment. Not only, however, for the sake of these earlier Scriptures, but for that of the records of nascent Christianity, the Lecturer urges a more thorough investigation of the Old Testament. There is no sharp distinction between Jewish and Christian, and in conclusion it is added that both religions were deeply affected by the syncretistic tendency. The same methods therefore must be applied to both. And yet those who have a keen religious sense know that each religion has its own idiosyncrasy, and it is for sympathetic scholars to make Churchmen understand what this idiosyncrasy is.

Summary of the Lecture 29

30 Summary of the Lecture

BIBLE PROBLEMS

AND THE NEW MATERIAL FOR THEIR SOLUTION

PART I

THE subject I have chosen is a large and important one, and if I consulted my own wishes I should plunge at once into the midst of facts. This course, however, would expose me to great risk of being misapprehended. Circumstances have changed so much, and new prejudices are so rapidly acquiring consistence, that an act of the simplest faith and charity may be misunderstood by those who ought to welcome it. It is necessary, therefore, first of all, to survey, briefly but clearly, the present state of Biblical study, and to put forward such an ideal of character for students as may fortify them against temptations; only by this course can I venture to hope that much of my own trouble on the present occasion will not be taken in vain. And I would ask leave to preface my survey by a reference to a chapter of recent history which seems to contain a useful lesson for to-day.

Imagine yourselves, then, in the year of grace 1870, listening to that great protagonist of science, the late Professor Huxley. It is one of the addresses published in the volume called "Lay Sermons"; the sinewy force of its English, and the earnestness of the speaker, give it permanent value as a record of the time. In it Professor Huxley calls upon his young hearers to refute the charge that the Christianity of the nineteenth century has nothing but abuse for the Priests of Science. It is for the honour of the younger generation that he makes this appeal; Science herself is too great, too transcendental, either to take offence or to need an advocate; and he quotes that fine passage of Dante,¹ in which, describing the injurious words ignorantly addressed by men to Fortune (for Fortune Huxley would read Science), the poet says:—

And she it is, on whose devoted head
 Are heaped such vile reproach and calumny
 By those whose praise she rather merited.

But she is blest, and hears not what they say ;
 With other primal beings, joyously
 She rolls her sphere, exulting on her way.

Organized religion, as represented by the majority of our clergy, was at that time hostile to science. It was undoubtedly a pure mistake that caused this, and the mistake has had a parallel in still more recent times. Not very long ago, organized religion, through its representatives, appeared to be almost equally hostile to Biblical critics. Controversy darkened the air, and the breach was becoming irreparable, when in the nick of time the ablest church-leaders were led to acknowledge, virtually if not expressly, that they had been in the wrong, and that they had misjudged the critics. No longer could they help seeing that in their suspected brethren devoutness and the love of truth were happily matched, and that some critical workers at any rate were as zealous for religion, and in their own way as able to promote it, as themselves. Upon this, the suspicions of the clergy were to a great extent allayed. Injurious words ceased to be spoken, and in many quarters expositions of the chief current results of Old Testament criticism were received with favour or indulgence.

¹ Inferno, canto vii., lines 90–95. Huxley gives W. M. Rossetti's translation, which however is too literal to convey Dante's meaning effectively. The above, which is Wright's, at any rate has the merit of translating the ideas.

One deficiency, however, there was on the part of the church-leaders. No desire, so far as I know, was expressed for a continuation of the forward movement in Old Testament criticism ; and as for New Testament criticism, it was only referred to as a foe to be repelled. In our church-congresses, indeed, we heard from time to time that the Bible had no cause to dread the keenest scrutiny. But in spite of this, the men engaged in critical work were beset with pointed exhortations to be "sober," "cautious," "moderate," and even "reverent," as if a true Biblical critic, in continual converse with holy men of old, and in constant view of the most marvellous of religious developments, could be anything but reverent. The result has been, not that research has altogether avoided the more delicate problems, but that it has for the most part been diverted to what are considered "safe" departments, such as the analysis of the sources of the Hexateuch, the textual criticism of the New Testament, and the literary problem of the Synoptic Gospels.

To me, I confess, this appears like unfaithfulness to our vocation, and my only comfort is that people are beginning to find out that one at least of the three departments mentioned is by no means "safe." And if even the textual critic of the New Testament cannot be always "sober" and "cautious," still less can the historical critic accomplish his task with such a slender moral equipment. Reverent he ought to be, but neither "sober" nor "cautious" nor "moderate" fitly describes his character. Perhaps "moderate" is the worst epithet of the three, for it suggests that critical truth is a mean between two extremes. There is indeed a true "moderation," but alas! it is not often seen. To apply Isaiah's words,¹ it is "as the shaking of an olive tree, two or three berries in the top of the uppermost bough, four or five in the outmost fruitful branches thereof."

What, then, is the higher, or rather let me say, the historical critic of the Bible? This is how I at least imagine him. He is not only reverent to the highest human ideal, but eager to throw any fresh light that he can on its forms of expression. He is not easily baffled, but earnest and thorough, and, in the use of his methods, resourceful. If he makes a mistake—for in new fields some errors are inevitable—he acknowledges it. He does not covet the praise of stability and consistency. Stable he is, and consistent he is, but not as “the man in the street” would define those terms. His consistency lies in his constant aim to penetrate further into historical truth.¹ He is aware indeed that some of his historical problems closely touch high spiritual truths, and that for these he may require the help of psychological students of religion. But he also knows that with such aid the most delicate problems of a historical religion can be rendered harmless, and he trusts that at the right time the manifest truth, which will satisfy the modern Christian conscience at all points, will reward faithful seekers.

¹ Isaiah xvii. 6, Authorized Version.

¹ The meaning of this is that development and progress are inseparable from research ; they are indeed part of the idea. It will be no slight step forward if the student thoroughly takes this in. There is perhaps at present not enough sympathy between researchers and students in general. In the future one hopes that this defect may be remedied, and that the advanced student may have more connected guidance in the paths of research.

If anyone here should be of opinion that no such resolute and resourceful critic has yet appeared among us,¹ the implied censure, even if excessive, might not be unwholesome. The present speaker at any rate claims no exemption from rebuke. He longs to be judged himself by a higher standard, and regretfully admits that our criticism of the Bible has not, in all its departments, aimed high enough. He confesses that he feels some pain at what he sees around him, and, feeling the difficulty of dispelling the timidity of his colleagues, is tempted to envy those who have an easier lot.

This human infirmity may perhaps be shared by some in this audience. For though, probably enough, no one here would like to denominate himself a critic, it is certain that every thoughtful Churchman ought to have a sense of responsibility for the position of criticism. Perhaps the chief reason why most English critics to-day are so backward is,—that the community at large is so unexacting. Those who hope that they are called to be critics give so little, because the public which judges them appears to ask so little. Doubtless they ought not to need an external stimulus ; still, they do. And so it may well be that some of those who, though not critics themselves, yet sympathize with critics, and see the danger of the situation and their own responsibility, may be tempted to give way to despondency.

¹ Had Robertson Smith lived, and been able to adapt himself to changed and changing circumstances, it is permissible to believe that he might have been such a critic for our time. I think he would have laughed at the idea of his critical views becoming one day represented as a standard of orthodoxy.

The present speaker asks leave to mention a fine poem in the Lyra Apostolica by which he has been helped. It is by Richard Hurrell Froude, that old High Churchman (1808–1836), who died early, and in his lifetime was Newman's closest friend, and it consists of an imaginary colloquy between Old Self and New Self. New Self notices the “downward look and sadly dreaming eye" of Old Self, as he sits upon a "sea-girt rock"; and asks the cause. Old Self says that he mourns the bygone days of childish simplicity. To this New Self replies,—

Mourn'st thou, poor soul? and thou would'st yet
Call back the things which shall not, cannot be?
Heaven must be won, not dreamed; thy task is set,
Peace was not made for earth, nor rest for thee.

Let us drink in the spirit of these words. Away with all depressing regrets for the bygone days of ignorance and low ideals! Let it be our happiness to "spend and be spent" in the cause of progress! "Doth not wisdom cry, and understanding put forth her voice," calling upon her friends to awake? For the voice of suspicion and denunciation begins to be heard again on the other side. A more "free" and "untrammelled" inquiry may be demanded by investigators of nature,¹ but the right, the duty, of a truly progressive criticism of the Bible is denied. Apologetic considerations are brought in to limit our freedom. The Fourth Gospel must be the work of the Apostle John, and must be in the main historical, because the inherited orthodoxy requires it. Discrimination between different kinds of narratives in the Gospels is discouraged, because of the inherited, uncritical interpretation of ancient Church formulæ. And though some Churchmen may be more tolerant than others, yet even these would prefer that a keener criticism of the Bible should be left to foreigners. The Church of England, say they, is not to be a laboratory for bold critical experiments, but a practical institution for coping with sin and wickedness.

¹ Sir Michael Foster, The Nineteenth Century and After, May 1904.

And so, partly at least, the Church of Christ must everywhere be. Most warmly do I sympathize with those worthy opponents who speak evil of Biblical criticism, but do noble work in saving souls. But I maintain that the national Church is not merely a hospital for the morally sick, but a union of the lovers of a high and comprehensive ideal, and that our Church will not deserve its position unless it devotes itself to the ideal, not only of goodness but of historical truth. I respectfully entreat leaders of the Church not to hinder our scholars from doing their work thoroughly. Either let there be no criticism at all of the form of holy scriptures and church-formulæ—a fatal mistake, doubtless,—or let it be a genuine, unrestricted, truly complete one. Biblical criticism has been admitted into the Church; let Churchmen recognize it as one of God's gifts, and seek to make the most of it. I admit that criticism has much, very much, to receive,—for its professors have to learn what vital Christianity is from the Christian Church,—but surely it has much, very much, to give, for the more historical insight the Church acquires, the better it will be able to re-interpret its doctrines, and, if need be, to reformulate them. It may be true, as some friend of M. Loisy has said (Church Quarterly Review, April 1904), that the twofold character of the Church of England (at once Catholic and Evangelical) makes it more difficult for its members to adjust the relations of criticism and faith than for Roman Catholics ; but that should only make us Anglicans more eager to harmonize those two great theories—the Catholic and the Evangelical—on the basis of an improved psychology of religion and a free Biblical criticism. The Anglican communion would then perhaps have a better chance of recovering lost members and winning new friends. It would then perhaps acquire a fresh right to call itself at once, in a modern sense of the good old words, National, Catholic, and Evangelical.

If nothing less than this is their ultimate object, may not educated Churchmen, both leaders and followers, rightly be asked, not only not to hinder the work of Biblical criticism, but also to take note of and encourage its progress? This means, not merely reading more or less carefully such books as register what is called the average opinion of scholars—an opinion which represents rather yesterday than to-day, or at least a to-day, which even while we speak is becoming yesterday,—but following with keen curiosity those far-reaching researches which will take a long time yet to bring to their completion. I am not of course suggesting a degree of thoroughness in study impossible for most practical men, nor do I desire any injustice to what is called “moderate” criticism. My contention is that just as all true students of religious history ought to know something of more than one religion, so all true Bible students ought to know something of more than one criticism ; but I would add to this the thesis that if moderate criticism demands no slight degree of attention, that criticism which is in the van of progress demands still more, because the task of assimilating it is so difficult. A little knowledge is surely not a dangerous thing, unless we imagine it to be greater than it is, and proceed to set all the rest of the world right on the strength of it. It is distinctly worth your while to learn from those English and foreign critics who, with due deliberation, question and to some extent reconstruct traditional history. And if you will only put aside what prejudiced critics have said against Winckler or Van Manen, or, to mention a far more sympathetic and finely tempered innovator, Alfred Loisy, you will find that from each in turn you can gather precious instruction, even if you have a personal preference for Kautzsch¹ or Harnack or our own much-respected William Sanday. For of none of the advanced critics to whom I have referred can it prudently or fairly be said, "He does not count."

It is true, as the late Professor Hort—fitly named, I think, with Sanday—so finely remarked, that "an implicit confidence in all truth, a keen sense of its variety, and a deliberate dread of shutting out truth as yet unknown are no security against some of the wandering lights that are apt to beguile a critic." But this in itself wise caution, belongs more strictly to Holland or to Switzerland than to England. If indeed we happen to be thinking of criticism generally, we may appropriately enough address it to ourselves, but we "cribb'd, cabin'd, and confin'd" English scholars can scarcely be held to be in any special need of it. Our own chief danger obviously is, not from "wandering lights," but from a paralysing dread of new truths; and the case of innovation, if (contrary to all probability) such really exists, is not that of scholars starting out on their adventures without acquaintance with the pitfalls around them, and untouched by the moderating influences of ecclesiastical and academical tradition. Not such, most surely, is the case, even if, leaving our own country, you think of Hugo Winckler; for great, far greater than one might suppose, is the power of the traditions of the scholar's craft in the universities of Germany.¹ But if you have British innovators in your mind, it must be the case of men who have felt all those influences in the political and ecclesiastical atmosphere which make so strongly for compromise—men who have heard every day those cries, "Be sober, be moderate," which resound throughout our own Church, and indeed throughout the Christian communities of our land. And considering how slight is the encouragement to young scholars to leave the beaten track, the presumption is that any such case of innovation is that of men who have a long development behind them,—of men who have tried those methods which the younger scholars extol so much, and found them invaluable up to a certain point, and then useless and misleading. It will be the case of men who have known all that most "moderate" scholars can have learned, and have given it the fullest trial, of men who have looked before them, and profited by the newer aids, while strictly "moderate" scholars were still afraid to run risks, and to strike out from the shore. It will be the case of those who to-day see such scholars keeping aloof from the hardest problems, or if exceptionally they approach them, arriving at unsatisfactory results, because they are without the necessary new methods, and the experience out of which the discovery of those new methods proceeds. It will be the case of those who are not indeed perfect critics, self-sufficient and infallible, but who are at anyrate qualified to lead, and to cope with difficulties. At the same time, the innovators, if they exist, will be men who decline to be condemned on utterly false grounds by scholars who have not taken the trouble to understand either their principles or their methods, and who would themselves have to be condemned if the same treatment were measured out to them. For there is no scholar, however able, who could not be, metaphorically, cut to pieces, if like Dante's friend Sigieri¹ he "syllogized invidious truths," and represented a point of view which was not that of his critic.

¹ I mention Kautzsch, not merely out of personal regard, but because to my surprise the editor of the Dictionary of the Bible has intrusted the article "History of the Religion of Israel" in his extra volume to this valued contributor to the Encyclopædia Biblica.

¹ I have only mentioned Winckler, because he alone of the innovating critics referred to has a post in a German university. Schmiedel, however, though a professor in Switzerland, was trained in Germany, and has a truly German fear of extremes. Van Manen and Loisy would require separate study—a study which would cause me to digress too far from my present theme.

That the "advanced" critics, both German and English, have their faults, who would dream of denying? But so too have our "moderate" critics, though the public seldom hears of them. And I plead that the real or supposed faults of each (how easy it is to suppose faults!) should be judged considerately, and without controversial bitterness, remembering the many-sidedness of truth. If the "advanced" critics sometimes go too fast, it is because they have to make up for lost time, and for the languor of others, and next—so at least I hope—because they have a strong faith in the power of the Church to adapt herself to new readings of history, and lastly, because they look forward to a day in which Biblical criticism, though not entirely broken off, will be less insistent in its claims.¹ And if the "moderate" critics go too slowly, it is partly because they value tradition as a starting-point so highly that they think it unsafe to go too far, or at least too fast from it, and partly because, unlike M. Loisy, they consider that strict moderation in criticism is requisite for the welfare of religion. One may be sure that if they cultivate "moderation," it is not merely because of the voices outside which call for it, but because of a warning oracle within their own conscience.

¹ Dante, Paradiso, canto x., lines 136-138.

I could not therefore propose to you either to ignore (this would be a sin), or to oppose (this would be a mistake), such truly honest scholars, but I do advise the student not to listen to them when they seek to keep him from reading books which do not please them.

¹ See "An Appeal for a Higher Exegesis," by the present writer, Expositor, January 1904.

I believe that their motives are good, but this makes it all the more imperative to warn you that too many of these scholars have become the champions of a new and highly exclusive critical orthodoxy. We do not want a new Church-militant, whose foes are not sin and wickedness, but critical innovation. I wish that I could be the voice, and nothing but the voice, of an effective counter-influence. But for the sake both of a distinctly progressive scholarship and of a more defensible theology, I am bound, not only to be a voice, but to defend the representatives of the new critical movement, whether in England or in Germany, against what has been unwisely called a "necessary hostility." This I propose to do, not by retaliation, but by a friendly suggestion preparatory to my exposition of new facts. It seems to me that I can thus best excuse what some may think the boldness of this Lecture, and also promote better relations between two classes of scholars who cannot be separated without mutual injury.

The suggestion, or rather offer, which I have to make, and for the general character of which I am sure in advance of your support, partakes of the nature of a "self-denying ordinance." It is briefly this. Let there be mutual tolerance and recognition throughout the commonwealth of Bible students. On the one hand let all respect be shown to Biblical scholars of what may be called a liberal-conservative type,—Old Testament men who have absorbed much of the criticism of the last century, but whose aim or instinct is not to go very much in advance of Church opinion, and New Testament men, who assume less than their confrères have done of previous criticism, and might sometimes be taken for conservatives, but who are in their own way critics, and undoubtedly desire progress. Let it become a rule that no member of any section of the more advanced school of critics shall decline to receive help from any suggestion of his more conservative brethren which implies accurate information as to the facts, and does sufficient justice to his point of view.¹ But on the other hand, let there be a place of equal honour for that broader school,² whose ideal I endeavoured to sketch not long ago. Let there be no talk on the part of "moderate" scholars in their magazines of having to assume an attitude of opposition to any of these critics, in order to exclude influences adverse, as they think, to their own on the minds of students. And, last not least, must I not ask that in their critical and exegetical writings there should be clear evidence of the recognition of new problems, and of an endeavour to enter into the critical point or points of view of their bolder colleagues? For if this be omitted, whatever the branch of study may be, but more especially in Bible study, there is sure to be a failure of justice and a check to progress on the part of the adherents of the older and more conservative scholarship.

¹ I hope I may assume that Professor Winckler, free of speech as he is, would not object, if German circumstances required, to adopt this rule.

² In this school I should like to include all who are definitely striving towards a broader point of view, even if in some respects they have not shaken off old prejudices.

Should the spirit of this offer (of which this audience is witness) find no comprehension, the prospect which I at least see before us is a gloomy one. Progress is only possible in a society with a free atmosphere, and such an atmosphere will not, in the case supposed, exist in our society. Mutual toleration and recognition, fairness to all those who differ from us, is the only remedy against a deadening chill to progress, and such toleration, fairness, recognition will not be cultivated among us.

But why, I ask, should this climax of misery be reached? Every competent scholar knows that the "sober" criticism of to-day was considered "extravagant" yesterday, and that there are problems enough, both small and great, in Biblical study, the surface of which has at present barely been grazed, or which at best have been very imperfectly solved.

Why refuse any offer of help? Is there anyone who ventures to assert that there is a fundamental difference between the schools of criticism, such as that which exists between mediæval and modern philosophy or science? Surely not. Both schools in all their sections affirm with equal earnestness the continuity of critical progress; and the members of the newer school, however divided in many respects, agree in showing a capacity for opening new problems which science cannot dispense with. If some impetuous persons, in their extravagant addiction to "moderate" criticism, have decreed a partition wall between the schools, cannot those who are truly "sober" critics intervene to oppose this? They cannot venture to decline all responsibility for the present state of things, and I indulge the hope that they may do their utmost to convince their unwise colleagues of the "error of their way."

PART II

MY fellow-Churchmen! For the last few minutes I have addressed myself not only to you, but to scholars at a distance, in the hope of removing ominous misunderstandings. I rejoice now to be able to turn to my special theme, but I rejoice with trembling. First, because there is good reason to doubt whether the Anglican Church in general is quite as conscious as the mediæval Church of the West certainly was, of the necessity and innocence of free investigation within its borders; and next, because, however great the pains an investigator may take in dealing with new facts, he is sure to make mistakes. I have, however, endeavoured to show, not for the first time, how deep is my love and reverence for the Church of Christ; so much, I am sure, will be generally recognized. As for my mistakes, I do not, from my own point of view, think that they can be very dangerous. All is not wrong, and my mistakes will be sedulously corrected, as they may appear. Sympathy, not censoriousness, is desirable in my critics, for as the great mediæval poet says in another context:—

To stem this sea may no light bark essay,
Or careless pilot who his toil would spare;
Since deep the daring prow must cleave its way.¹

I begin with the New Testament. The facts of which I shall speak have not been discovered by myself, nor shall I always have something original to say concerning them. But, if I am not much mistaken, they are still far too little known and understood. In one case I seem to have a special right to say this, because I have long been occupied with the same class of phenomena in another field.

¹ Dante, Paradiso, canto xxiii., lines 67-69 (Wright's translation).

You will pardon me if I make a slight digression in explanation of this.

It appears from certain parts of the Old Testament that various popular Jewish beliefs are closely connected with a widespread Oriental mythology. Winckler has, I grant, exaggerated the amount of evidence for this in the Hebrew Bible. This arises partly from his absorption in an elaborate theory respecting the mythological view of the world current in Babylonia and in the Babylonian sphere of influence, and partly from his insufficient recognition of the redactional and transcriptional changes which the original Hebrew documents have undergone. Still, all deductions made, the Old Testament evidence does appear to be not inconsiderable. The early chapters of Genesis, for instance,¹ contain accounts of the Cosmogony and the ¹ Mr W. H. Mallock, in the Nineteenth Century, Sept. 1904, speaks of these chapters as "discredited." Why should myths, or narratives based on myths, be discredited? Myths are very fascinating and instructive things, but need to be approached with imaginative sympathy.

Deluge, which are semi-mythical in form, and ultimately of Babylonian origin. So much, I suppose, apart from the word "semi-mythical," would be universally accepted. But we may quite safely go further, and assert that details of other quasi-historic narratives, as well as prophetic and poetical phrases and forms of belief in the Old Testament, are semi-mythical, and show the direct or indirect influence of Babylonia. In saying this I do not deny the idiosyncrasy of the Jewish religion, nor do I admit the vulgar identification of myth with fable.¹ I only affirm that certain elements in the Israelitish records, though sufficiently² fused with the central religious principles, were borrowed from a people of higher antiquity and prestige, and of richer and more luxuriant imagination.

It has been my lot to be one of the pioneers

¹ In defence of the use of the word "myth," see Lobstein, The Virgin-Birth of Christ (Crown Theological Library), page 128, top, "Myth, no less than history," etc.

² For examples of an incomplete fusion see Gen. vi. 1-4, and Rev. xii. 1.

in the work of proving this. It was not my wish to imply that the Hebraized myths, or semi-myths, were from a religious point of view merely on a level with their Oriental originals. But I certainly did mean that there were points in Oriental religious systems with which the Israelites had some degree of sympathy. For religion being, from the ancient point of view, a part of culture—indeed its very centre and origin—those who were affected by any external culture could not but fall under the influence of the accompanying religion. And though I could not admit that the phrase “symbolic narrative” was a better or truer expression than “myth,” I certainly did hold that adapted myths, like those of the Cosmogony and the Deluge, and of Jonah in the “great fish,” were the repositories of spiritual truths, which, in an abstract form, could not have been conceived by Jewish minds, much less have commanded general attention.

I will now proceed to say why I hold that facts of Oriental archæology (including mythology) may hopefully be brought into connexion with the New Testament. My reason is that a careful study reveals in some places considerable similarity between the New Testament and the Old in the nature of their contents. There should at any rate be nothing in this to shock any conservative theologian. It is true, there is much greater variety in the Old Testament than in the New, but the form and substance of much that the Old Testament contains is parallel to that of much that is contained in the New. If this is the case, there is no apparent reason why the criticism of the New Testament should not be brought more into line with that of the Old, and why, in our criticism, we should reject the aid of Oriental archæology. I do not, of course, undervalue the help of advanced textual criticism, the greatest achievements of which, however, are reserved for the future. I also fully admit that discoveries of fragments of Gospels, and of Logia of Jesus, as well as of other unimagined treasures, must, when critically treated, contribute to the solution of interesting problems. Still, for some of the most delicate and important problems the critic will have to become to a certain extent an archæologist, and even, to speak more precisely, a mythologist. And I submit that the form of the most peculiar and difficult New Testament statements can only be accounted for by the newly-discovered fact of the all-pervading influence of Oriental and more particularly Babylonian and Persian systems of belief. ✓

Here the objector may perhaps ask, "Are you not inviting us to empty the New Testament of its special significance? If you touch the form of a New Testament statement, must you not jeopardize the contents? Are not form and contents, here at least, inseparably united?" I reply that in the case of the Old Testament I have not given such a proof of spiritual dulness as the objector supposes me to be giving in the case of the

New. The significance of the most peculiar and difficult statements in the Old Testament is not impaired, but rather brought into fuller relief, by the exhibition of the semi-mythic character of the form. Why should it be otherwise in the case of the New? Why should it be denied that the form and the essential contents of New Testament statements can be distinguished, through the harmonious co-operation of two classes of critics, one literary and historical, the other philosophical or psychological? It appears to me that scepticism as to the fundamental truths of Christianity partly arises from our having insisted on the inseparableness of the form and the spiritual contents of certain New Testament statements. It was inevitable to insist upon this at the time when our Church formularies were compiled; it is neither necessary nor judicious to do so in our day. May our rulers be guarded from rash action! On this point it may be helpful to Anglicans if I quote the opinion of an earnest liberal

Roman Catholic—the Baron von Hügel—as given in the following passage, though most of us perhaps may use different language as to the relation of “the Church” to Christian experience.

The idea of the Incarnation¹ supposes and contains, on the one hand, a limited series of historical phenomena; on the other, an unlimited reality and power which can be reached and which communicates itself to us across these phenomena. This reality draws our souls to itself, by all that is deepest and most inalienable within us. It is this that our experience of life, aided by grace, seeks and wishes for. Doubtless, the act of faith which unites us to this reality does not apply directly to the phenomena, but in fine it supposes them and makes use of them. Taken in themselves, these historical facts belong to history. It is for the historical methods to control them. As soon as this preliminary work is started, the Church intervenes, and puts us on our guard against all à priori rationalism. Here its jurisdiction is only indirect and negative. It recognizes itself the rights and the necessity of a serious critical method, and it interdicts to us equally rationalism or scepticism and “fideism” or superstition in the manipulation of those documents. Let criticism do its work. Upon its completion there will still remain undebateable facts enough for the needs of religion. The Church is sure of this. It is promised to her by her faith, which shows to her in God the unique source of reason and of revelation, of nature and of grace. No ingenuity of apologetics could add anything to that faith,—a faith which hitherto facts have always justified.

¹ It is time for historical theologians to gird themselves to the task of explaining the outward form of the great belief referred to. How came the words καὶ ὁ λόγος σὰρξ ἐγένετο (John i. 14) to be written?

In the search for, and the study of, the second of these elements the Church enters directly on the scene, being co-producer and guardian of Christian experience and mistress of truth. There her jurisdiction is positive. There an indefinite amount of growth is positive. There an indefinite amount of growth is possible, though a certain fixity of orientation regulates and controls that growth.¹

Among the peculiar and difficult New Testament statements to which I have referred are those concerning the virgin-birth of Jesus Christ (Matt. i. 18, cp. vv. 23, 25) and concerning His descent into the nether world (Matt. xii. 40, cp. Rom. x. 7, Eph. iv. 8–10, 1 Pet. iii. 18 ff. [?], Rev. i. 18). I mention these statements in the first instance because they strike one with a greater sense of strangeness than does the statement that (omitting “the third day,” because the time-reference belongs rather to the Descent) Jesus Christ rose (or was raised) from the dead, or the companion-statement that He ascended into heaven. For these two statements may, provisionally at least, be represented as simple postulates of faith,¹ but it cannot plausibly be regarded as a postulate of unaided faith that the Messiah should be born of a virgin, or that He should descend for three (or for two) days into Sheól. It is plain therefore that at least in these two cases every truth-loving Churchman must admit that a critical examination is liable to no objection from the side of faith. I shall now proceed to act upon this necessary admission, so far as the form of a lecture permits. At the same time I would point out to the student in passing that there is a far greater subject of inquiry than this. What we most keenly wish to know is, not whether the two statements referred to can be accounted for as non-historical or extra-historical, but what peculiarity there was in the personality of Jesus of Nazareth which led early disciples to identify Him with the Christ, the Son of God, and by which we too, so long afterwards, are led habitually to call Him "our Lord" and "our Saviour."¹

¹ Du Christ Éternel et de nos Christologies successives, par le Baron F. de Huegel. Extrait de La Quinzaine, 1^{er} juin 1904.

¹ Cp. Lex Orandi, by George Tyrrell, S.J. (1903), pp. 182 ff., 187 ff.

This, and nothing but this, stands by itself as the most fascinating critical problem presented by the Gospels. Why did an early Christian writer say, "Every spirit which confesses that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is born of God" (1 John iv. 2)? And again, "Who is he that conquers the world, but he that believes that Jesus is the Son of God?" (1 John v. 5)

It does not, however, enter into my present plan to discuss this high theme. I am concerned just now with the statement of the birth of Jesus of Nazareth from a virgin. This is of course separate from the question as to His birthplace and His family, and as to the reported census of "Cyrenius." The subject of the Virgin-Birth has a distinctive character of its own, and requires to be taken up again from a special point of view. The testimony to the fact is limited to the preludes to the First and Third Gospels, and we shall find that it is not certain that the testimony of our Luke can be pressed. This limitation is of itself significant; I mean that it justifies the suspicion that the contents, or whatever may be the kernel of the contents, cannot be regarded as certainly historical, while on the other hand it may incline us to attach all the more historical importance (subject to further investigation) to the unquestioned part of those two Gospels. It was a not unreasonable conjecture of continental Baptist theologians in the sixteenth century after Christ that the first two chapters of Matthew and of Luke were later interpolations.¹ The silence of the Gospels apart from these preludes cannot easily be explained away, but it is not my present object to consider what inferences follow. I desire to ascertain whether the statement of the Virgin-Birth cannot be accounted for in a way that shall not shock religious minds with a conservative bias. Perhaps I may also be successful in giving a specimen of the application of the historical method in the study of religious traditions. It is true that in doing this I shall have to become a mythologist, but I hope that my own efforts and those of others have loosened the prejudice of church-students against the much misunderstood and indispensable word "myth." And I can promise that by no careless words of mine shall the wrench which always attends separation from cherished ideas be rendered more painful.

¹ Cp. Lobstein's thrilling statement of the affirmations of the Christian consciousness (The Virgin-Birth of Christ, pp. 96-100).

¹ Prof. N. Schmidt, Ethical Record (New York), 1904, p. 72. It may be objected that these Baptists were heterodox. But what was Spinoza? And yet who denies that his doubts as to the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch were well founded?

The wrench of which I have spoken may be mitigated if we consider how well the idea of a mythic origin of the statement in question harmonizes with the undeniable central fact,—that long, very long, before the birth of Christ, the Israelites had come under the influence of highly developed Oriental cultures. If we consider what this necessarily involves, we shall see that this influence must have affected Israelitish religion. In fact, it is no longer possible to doubt that the Israelitish view of the world was partly coloured by portions of an elaborate mythology received from without, and that this accounts for many of those strange representations which we meet with from time to time in the Old Testament writings. It is true, the influence of different currents of culture-influences upon Palestine cannot be traced in an orderly historical manner. But one point at least is certain,—that the influence of Oriental forms of belief, Babylonian, Egyptian, Iranian, was specially strong in what is called, conventionally, the “post-exilic” period. Of course, the religion of Israel reacted against these influences, the dangerousness of which must have been apparent. Consequently the things which were borrowed were more or less completely Hebraized, and rendered innocuous. This constant pressure of Oriental beliefs on the Israelitish religion is abundantly attested, and its traces are nowhere more visible than in the apocalyptic portions of Daniel, and in the Book of Revelation. Continued study of these monuments of the syncretistic tendency in Judaism from this point of view is urgently needed.

Let me say at once that the historical explanation of the statement of the Virgin-Birth of Christ which seems to me to be the most probable, is that it originated, not in a mistranslation of the Immanuel-prophecy (Isa. vii. 14), which is Prof. Harnack's theory,¹ nor, immediately, in a non-Jewish, heathen story, adopted by Gentile Christians—a story such as those which Mr Hartland in his *Perseus*² and Prof.

¹ History of Dogma (Theological Translation Library), i. 100, note 1. See NOTE I., p. 191.

² Justin Martyr makes a significant reference to this myth (Apol. i. 54, Dial. 70). It would lead us too far afield to examine the story. Note, however, that Perseus is both virgin-born and dragon-slayer.

Usener in his Weihnachtsfest have collected in abundance (this is Prof. Schmiedel's theory¹), but in a story of non-Jewish origin current in Jewish circles, and borrowed from them by certain Jewish Christians (this is Prof. Gunkel's view²). The second theory mentioned is therefore only wrong in stating that the circles in which the statement of the Virgin-Birth of Jesus Christ was first current were Gentile-Christian. It also appears to me a mistake to institute too wide a search for parallels; a narrower range of comparison may give us clearer results. The parallels that we should most desire to get are—first, Arabian, because of Israel's early connexion with Arabia, and next, Babylonian, Egyptian, and Persian, because almost always Babylon, and in the later period Egypt and Persia also, were most likely to have influenced the beliefs of the main body of the Jews.

¹ Encyclopædia Biblica, "Mary," i., § 16. †

² Zum religionsgeschichtlichen Verständniss des N.T., 1903, pp. 68 f. Mythologizing conceptions in relation to Jesus Christ were not, Gunkel says, due to the later Gentile Christianity, but were already in existence in Jewish Christianity. Therefore the Jewish body itself must previously have possessed these or analogous conceptions.

Parenthetically, I may remark here that the popular Messianic belief was probably much more definite than we might suppose from most of the Jewish religious literature. It received a great impulse from the reference to the Messiah in the Book of Daniel¹ (vii. 13 f.), but this reference itself proves that the Messianic belief had already a development behind it. And from the Synoptic Gospels we see that this belief was deeply fixed in the popular mind in the time of Jesus. So much may be stated, with the brevity which our circumstances demand, to illustrate the statement that the account in Matt. i. 18 ff. has most probably arisen out of a non-Jewish story, known in certain Jewish circles, and adopted from these by some Jewish Christians.

Among the parallels which come into consideration I will first mention the N. Arabian mythic story of Dusares,¹ which the heathen Arabs themselves saw to be parallel. Dusares in fact was worshipped, both at Petra and at Elusa, as "the only begotten of the Lord" (μονογενῆς τοῦ Δεσπότου), and his mother as the Virgin (Παρθένος, Κόρη).² No doubt he is just such a deity as Tammuz (the Babylonian Dumūzi), who is variously represented as the son and as the husband of Istar.³ In this connexion it may be noticed that, as Jerome (Opera, i. 321) states, the cult of Tammuz or Adonis was practised in the reputed cave of the Nativity at Bethlehem. This father indeed regards the cult as a deliberate profanation, but the question is whether the cave had not, long before the birth of Christ, been connected by popular tradition with Tammuz-worship. The mother of Dusares was the old mother-goddess, and the title "Virgin" applied to her suggests the true meaning of the term in that non-Jewish story which was most probably adapted by Jews and Jewish Christians, as they thought best. Dusares, of course, being a Tammuz figure, is not represented as the world's Redeemer. That privilege was left for the Babylonian Marduk. He is, however, the "only begotten," which may remind us of the "only begotten God" in perhaps the best text of John i. 18.¹

¹ See NOTE IV., p. 213.

¹ Dusares = Dhū-sharā, a local name for Tammuz, alluding perhaps to the beginning of the year in autumn (Winckler, Arabisch-Semitisch-Orientalisch, p. 129). Cp. also Winckler, op. cit., pp. 126 f.; W. R. Smith, Kinship and Marriage, 2nd ed., pp. 298-303; Wellhausen, Reste des Arabischen Heidenthums, pp. 48 f.

² Epiphanius, Hær., li. The goddess is Al-Lat (p. 206).

³ See Enc. Biblica, "Tammuz"; and cp. "Adonis," § 2.

And what was the original meaning of the term "Virgin"? As has long since been shown, it expressed the fact that the great mythic mother-goddess was independent of the marriage-tie. In those remote times to which the cult of that goddess properly belonged, "the mother held the chief place in the clan, and all women shared a measure of free love."²

¹ μονογενῆς θεός is Westcott-Hort's reading; it is supported by Cod. Sin., B, C*, L, Memph., Pesh., Clem. Alex., Origen, Basil. The Revised Version, in margin, renders "God only-begotten."

² Barton, Semitic Origins (1902), p. 84.

The goddess-mother in fact preceded the goddess-wife. In Egypt, for instance, Isis first of all finds representation as an independent deity; only at a latter stage was she said to be married to Osiris. The student must not be repelled by my reference to these facts, the bearing of which on the statement in Matt. i. 18 will be expounded presently. We must remember that the real presence of a Spirit of Holiness in Israel is best proved by its transformations of the rude and gross conceptions of a primitive age.

We have now to pass on to a mythological narrative which is more important than that Arabian belief, because, when closely studied, it illustrates and explains a larger amount of the Matthæan prelude. It has come down to us in a Hebraized form, but it is still very full of mythological elements, so that we can safely illustrate it by parallels in Babylonian, Egyptian, and Persian beliefs. A Græco-Asiatic parallel has also a claim to be mentioned.

This important but very strange narrative has found insertion in one of the many composite books in the Bible, the Apocalypse of ✓ John (see Rev. xii.). Beyond doubt it has a Jewish source, though, as verse 11 shows, it has been worked up by a Christian writer.

But the Jewish narrator, or those earlier Jewish informants on whom he may have been dependent, derived it from some non-Jewish source. That source was a very ancient mythological tradition, which had become, so to speak, "international," but may in the last resort probably be traced to Babylonia.¹
That the woman "clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars" was, to the Jewish narrator, the mother of the expected Messiah, is plain.² But it is from the kindred mythologies of Babylonia and Egypt that we learn why the woman was so magnificently arrayed.
The reason was that, according to the underlying myth, she was the queen of heaven, the mother of the sun-god.¹ If there be any doubt of this, it is at once dispelled by the reference in verses 3 and 4 to the deadly foe of the woman and her son—"the great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his head seven diadems," who "stood before the woman, that when she was delivered he might devour her child." This dragon and his doings cannot be explained from Zoroastrian sources.²

¹ See NOTE II., p. 195.

² Cp. v. 5 with xix. 15 and Ps. ii. 9 (Psalms of Solomon, xvii. 24), and v. 10 with xi. 15 and Ps. ii. 2. See, however, NOTE VI., p. 240.

¹ "Queen of heaven" was one of the chief titles of the goddess Istar, "moonèd Ashtaroth, queen and mother both." Similarly in Roman Catholic phraseology, Regina Cœli means the Virgin Mary; whence Dante's use of "Regina del cielo" and "Donna del cielo," Paradiso, xxxi. 100, xxiii. 106, xxxii. 29.

² Till Fritz Hommel and Gunkel, critics had usually explained the dragon, or (xx. 2) the serpent, of Revelation from Zoroastrian sources. Plausible as this in some respects may be, the representations of the dragon in Revelation can all be explained from Babylonian mythology, which does not, however, exclude the combination of Zoroastrian influences. On this important point see NOTE III., and on the dragon-myth in general see Encyclopædia Biblica, "Creation," "Dragon," "Serpent," and for a well-arranged popular summary of facts A. Smythe-Palmer, Babylonian Influence on the Bible, 1897. On Zoroastrianism, see Encyclopædia Biblica, "Zoroastrianism," and cp. Moffatt, "Zoroastrianism and Primitive Christianity," Hibbert Journal, July 1903, pp. 763 ff.; Jan. 1904, pp. 347 ff.

He is the monster, so specifically Babylonian, known as Tiâmat (a feminine form), who represents primæval chaos, and who ruled the world till the young sun-god Marduk conquered her. According to one form of the myth (alluded to in some Old Testament passage)¹ the dragon had been hurled down by his divine conqueror to the watery abyss; hence in vv. 15 and 16 we are told that he cast out of his mouth water as a river, after the woman. For, naturally enough, he persecuted the woman whose child was destined to become his subduer. How the dragon knew this we are not told, but the original myth doubtless stated (cp. NOTE II., p. 205). It is added that the earth helped the woman, and swallowed up the river produced by the dragon; that is, the earth, dreading the destructive flood from the great deep (in Hebrew têhôm, akin to Tiâmat, the name of the Babylonian dragon), placed herself—as the ¹ See Am. ix. 3, Ps. xlv. 20, Job. iii. 8 (xli. 10), vii. 12, xli. 1-7, and cp. Enc. Biblica, "Dragon," § 5; Gunkel, Schöpfung, pp. 86 f.

Babylonians would have said—on the side of Tiámat's conqueror. In reality it is the old story of the conflict between light and darkness, order and disorder, transferred to the latter days, and adapted by spiritualization, and by the removal of the name Marduk, to the wants of faithful Jews.

There are not a few difficulties in Rev. xii., notably the reference to Michael¹ (vv. 7-9) as the antagonist and conqueror of the dragon, but into these I cannot now enter. What I have to call your attention to is, that this strange and difficult narrative makes no reference to the Messiah's father. This may be explained by the hypothesis that in the Oriental myth upon which this Jewish narrative is based, the mother alone was mentioned. For the "woman clothed with the sun" evidently represents one of those heaven goddesses (e.g., Istar, Isis, Artemis) who were mothers, but not originally wives,²—in short "virgins," in the sense in which Παρθένος was applied to the great mother-goddess of Asia Minor. It appears probable that in some of the early Jewish versions of the Oriental myth of the Divine Redeemer (which has not, so far as we know as yet, been preserved) the mother of the Holy Child was called a "virgin," for nothing is easier than for divine titles to pass from one religion to another, and for their original meaning to be forgotten. In other versions it is possible that the title adopted was "the Woman," a term which may be directly traceable to Babylonia.¹ For the former title, we

¹ See NOTE IV., p. 222.

² See Ramsay, Historical Commentary on the Galatians,

p. 202 (cp. pp. 40 f.), and cp. Roscher, Lex. der Griech.-röm. Mythologie, ii. 1, col. 364. See also the note in W. R. Smith's Kinship, 2nd edition, pp. 298-306, ending with the words, "It is well worth inquiring whether in North Semitic religion also the goddess-mother is not older than the goddess-wife," etc.; and G. A. Barton, Semitic Origins, chap. iii.

¹ It has been suggested by Zimmern (K.A.T., 3rd ed., p. 361) that the title, "The Woman," may have come from the name of the consort of the divine Redeemer of the Babylonians, which was Damkina, i.e., "the woman of the depth," the Δάυκη of Damascius. Cp. Gunkel, Schöpfung, p. 386. Surely Damkina, like Istar, was not originally bound by the marriage-tie.

can with some confidence refer to the Septuagint rendering of hā-'almah in Isa. vii. 14 (ἡ [✓] παρθένος, whence the rendering of our version), which I know not how otherwise to explain¹ than as an allusion to a belief current among the translator's contemporaries, and for the latter to Rev. xii. 1 (by implication), and just possibly to a passage in the Book of Enoch (lxix. 29), where the oldest manuscript has, not "Son of man," but "Son of the woman."² I may state, however, that I do not myself lay any stress on the second of these titles for the Messiah's mother, and mention it here, in deference to some other scholars.³

It must surely be obvious that neither "the virgin" nor "the woman" was a natural title to be invented by the Jews for the Messiah's mother. Both are most easily explained on the mythological theory which I am now expounding. I mean that both titles (if both may be accepted) came from one or more versions of an old Babylonian myth of the birth and exploits of the divine Redeemer of the world.

¹ See p. 194, NOTE I.

² An error in the translation may, however, be suspected.

³ Gunkel and Zimmern.

The correctness of this opinion, as regards the title "the virgin," can be rendered still more probable by a slight digression. There is a well-known Jewish-Christian view, found in a fragment of the Gospel according to the Hebrews and elsewhere, that the mother of the Messiah was the Holy Spirit (the Hebrew rūah, "spirit," is generally feminine). The passage containing it is, "Even now thy mother the Holy Spirit has seized me by one of my hairs, and has borne me to the great mountain Tabor," which probably refers to a narrative of the Temptation of Jesus Christ.¹ That this view was originally connected with a non-Jewish myth of the birth of the Redeemer from a divine Mother, viz.,

¹ See Enc. Biblica, cols. 1896, 4884, also 4966 (where the reference to Tabor is explained). The passage is quoted by Origen; see Nestle, N.T. Græci Supplementum, p. 77. Cp. also Wilkinson's interesting letter, Guardian, Nov. 2, 1904.

Istar, is suggested by the fact,¹ that by the Mandæans the Holy Spirit is equated with Istra-Libat, i.e., Istar-Dilbat.² It is true that, according to the old belief spoken of, the Holy Spirit became united with Jesus of Nazareth at the Baptism. But this must be read in the light of the theory elaborated in Egypt, but altogether Oriental in spirit, that the divine double (called in Egyptian ka) infused into a royal infant at his birth awoke to self-consciousness at the moment of his accession to the throne. The myth, out of which that old Jewish-Christian view developed, must have stated that the world's Redeemer (not Jesus Christ) was the child of Istar. It will be remembered that the sacred bird of Istar (Astarte) was the dove, and that in Matt. iii. 16, Mark i. 10, Luke iii. 22, John i. 32, the supernatural form which appeared at Christ's baptism is likened to a dove; also that the view connecting the Divine Sonship with the Baptism is strongly suggested by that form of the text of Luke iii. 22 b, which "was read in the Greek Church down to about 300 A.D. and in the Latin West down to 360 A.D.," viz., "and a voice came from heaven, which said, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee."¹

¹ Mentioned by Zimmern (op. cit., p. 440, note 2) on the authority of Nöldeke.

² Dilbat is the Sumerian name for the planet Venus. The connexion of Istar with this planet is primitive. See Zimmern, K.A.T., 3rd ed., pp. 424 f.

It is time, however, to pause. I have not indeed completed the critical proof of the mythic character of the statement of the Redeemer's birth, so abundant is the store of material. Not to lay stress on Greek myths,² which we do not, strictly speaking, require for the illustration of a Jewish tradition, I may remark that I have by me Assyrio-Babylonian and Egyptian evidence,³ which seems to deserve more attention than it has yet received. But

¹ Cp. the ecclesiastical use of ἰοθεσία for "baptism." The quotation is from Usener, Encyclopædia Biblica, col. 3348. See also Usener's illustrations from the history of the sacrament of Baptism (Weihnachtsfest, pp. 166 ff.).

² See NOTE II., Section D. ³ See NOTE v., p. 235.

I will confine myself here to mentioning one remarkable traditional story which cannot very well be passed over—that of the Babylonian king Sargon (Sargina) of Agadè, who flourished about 3800 B.C.¹ It is a legend of mythic origin, and represents the great king as having been born of a poor mother in secret, and as not knowing his father.² There is reason to suspect that something similar was originally said by the Israelites of Moses,³ and would it be strange if a similar account were given of the birth of Jesus Christ, the second Moses?

¹ It has come down to us in a copy dating from the eighth century B.C.

² See R. W. Rogers, History of Babylonia and Assyria, i. 362; Winckler, Geschichte Israels, ii. 91; and cp. Enc. Biblica, col. 3207. We may illustrate the above by the legendary statement in the Westcar Papyrus that the first three kings of the fifth Egyptian dynasty were children born to Ra (the sun-god) by the wife of a priest (Maspero, Dawn of Civilization, p. 258, note 4). Stories of this sort naturally arose in the case of usurpers. Thus Alexander the Great was represented as having been born to the god Ammon (Ra), i.e., without a human father (Trogus, in Justin, Hist., xi. 11; cp. N. Schmidt, Enc. Biblica, col. 4693). See NOTE II., end.

³ See Encyclopædia Biblica, "Moses," § 3, with note 4.

I trust that I shall not be misinterpreted. This is only a conjecture, but both science and history constantly need the help of conjecture, and this conjecture is a very plausible and illuminative one. For, thanks to the acuteness and thoroughness of Gunkel, it is now incontrovertible that reflections of mythology lasted to a very late period among the Jews. Rendel Harris, too, has shown that fragments of myths were in circulation in many strange disguises in the early Christian centuries, and I too could easily lead my hearers into fields which would supply some important analogies for the view which is here proposed. But this appears to me a case in which one may say that "half is more than the whole."

Still, there is one other statement in the Matthean prelude which I must, however briefly, mention, and endeavour to explain. In the original myth of the World-redeemer's birth a place was doubtless given to the persecution of His mother by the dragon. No practised eye can fail to see that this has its counterpart in Matt. ii. The infuriated dragon becomes the angry Herod, whose popular reputation for cruelty marked him out as a fit historical representative of the bloodthirsty monster of chaos. Instead of flying into the wilderness (Rev. xii. 14), the holy Mother of Christ flees with her Child, under the conduct of Joseph, to Egypt.¹ The time, too, is different (probably) from that in the original myth, which must surely have said that the woman fled to a safe place appointed by the Deity, that she might be delivered. In Rev. xii. 4 the dragon is in fact represented as persecuting the woman before the birth of her child, though the flight into the wilderness (of which two accounts are given, v. 6 and v. 14) is placed after the birth. Of course, in the earliest form of the myth a flight into the wilderness could not have found place; for the phenomena must have been all heavenly. Indeed, even in Rev. xii. the story begins with the statement, "There appeared a great sign in heaven."

¹ The application of Hos. xi. 1 b to the sojourn of the Holy Family in Egypt is extremely difficult. The real reason for the substitution of Egypt for "the wilderness" probably is that Egypt, according to several Old Testament passages, was chosen as a place of refuge, or of temporary sojourn, by several of the personages of sacred history. (The original meaning of the word read as Mizraim, "Egypt," in those passages need not be considered.)

Let me hasten to add that, though the prelude to the First Gospel does appear to contain mythic elements, it is equally clear that the Christians, even more than their Jewish predecessors, treated the borrowed material very freely, in the spirit of those words of St Paul, "all things are yours." The woman arrayed with the sun—a representation still preserved in the Jewish-Christian apocalyptic passage—became to the writer in the Matthæan prelude a lowly Jewish maiden;¹ the functions of her son became, not the destruction of the chaos-monster, nor the ruling of nations with a rod of iron, but the internal as well as external salvation of his people; the royal capital of the Redeemer became, not Babylon, but Jerusalem; the dragon, with jaws wide open to devour, became Herod, "seeking the young child" in Bethlehem "to destroy him"; the flight of the mother into the wilderness (the child had been caught up to God's throne) became the flight of the Holy Family into Egypt. The stress laid on the virginity (in the ordinary sense of the word) of the holy mother is peculiar to the evangelist. It arose out of a misunderstood title which originally implied something very far from the thoughts of Christians, and the narrative, to a historic and therefore reverent mind, is by no means disparaged if taken to stand in some connexion with the Egyptian theory of the divine generation of kings (see NOTE III. B), and the Philonian belief in the divine generation of certain favoured personages of the Old Testament.¹ Nor must we forget one of the most important distinctions of the Gospel story, viz., that while, in the imperfectly Hebraized story in Rev. xii., the birth of the Redeemer (not "made like unto us in all things") is in heaven, in the Christian narrative the scene of the event is transferred to a humble resting-place on earth.

¹ See NOTE VI., p. 240.

¹ Philo, De Cherubim, § 13 (i. 180 f.), referred to by Conybeare, and also by Usener, Enc. Biblica, "Nativity," § 17. See also Abbott, Enc. Biblica, "Gospels," § 21, who gives other apposite quotations from Philo.

This view of the ultimate origin of the Matthæan narrative should take away all pain from the discovery that the statement of the Virgin-Birth is isolated even in the Gospel where it occurs, and that it receives no support, direct or indirect, from any other passage in the New Testament except Luke i. 34, 35, which is most probably a later insertion.¹ There is nothing surprising in this. It is obvious that there was no compulsory uniformity of belief and expression in the early Church. Different writers had different didactic objects and different habits of mind, and wrote in the simplicity of their hearts, without any suspicion that they were contributing to the formation of an authoritative church-document.

¹ See NOTE VII., p. 244.

To sum up. The mythological theory, rightly understood, removes the huge difficulties which beset the statements in the Matthæan prelude on the assumption that they are historical. The statement in Matt. i. 18, and the passage introduced by it, together with the episode of the persecution in Matt. ii. 13-21,¹ are shown by the foregoing facts to be not history in the modern sense of that word, but rather a substitute for history addressed to the pious imagination. Some persons may find it difficult at first to realize this. It becomes their duty, therefore, to acquaint themselves with some of the numerous imaginative narratives in the later Jewish literature, and also with the striking specimens of this kind of composition in the Old Testament writings. The Book of Genesis, as all recent critics agree, abounds in passages which, though seemingly historical, are really legends,¹ and sometimes even contain elements of non-Jewish mythic origin. So far as the virginity of the Mother of Christ is concerned—I speak as a historical critic—the passage in the prelude to the First Gospel is a Jewish-Christian transformation of a primitive story, derived ultimately, in all probability, from Babylonia, and analogous to the Jewish transformation of the Babylonian cosmogony in the opening section of Genesis. That primitive story has evidently passed through a succession of phases—1. concurrent Oriental phases, one cannot exactly tell how many, 2. a Jewish phase, 3. a Jewish-Christian. This is the view, which in my opinion is historically most acceptable, having regard both to the far-reaching influence of Babylonia, and to the well-known habits of Jewish editors.

¹ On the story of the Magi in Matt. ii. 1-12, see NOTE VIII., p. 245.

¹ See H. Gunkel, The Legends of Genesis (Chicago, U.S.A.). In a less brilliant style, and seemingly with a less clear view of the nature of legends, Prof. Driver treats the same subject in an instructive and scrupulously moderate work, The Book of Genesis (Westminster Commentaries, edited by Dr Walter Lock), 1904, Introduction, § 3.

Is there any irreverence in this view? Such a supposition can only be excused by ignorance of the temper of historical critics. Reverence is a fundamental requirement in the historical student of religion. How indeed should we understand any of the utterances of faith without reverence? Even to the old Babylonian and Egyptian myths referred to above, we owe this tribute, for they express one of the most ancient longings of the human heart, that for a Redeemer from evil. And if the devout Egyptological student, Victor Annessi, goes too far when he transfers the most essential Catholic-Christian ideas into a remote antiquity, yet we cannot deny that at least the germs of some, or even many, of our holiest truths are derived from Egypt and Babylonia. It is, however, a somewhat different tribute—a mixture of reverence and love—that we owe to the traditions of the life of the Lord Jesus, and this tribute is not impaired if we seriously and sympathetically criticize the contents of those traditions. We may indeed be compelled to hold that the earliest and the latest, in the order of narration, are different in character from the great bulk of the narratives. But we know by our experience in the Old Testament that for a narrative to be non-historical, does not prevent it from having a religious value.

There are some liberal thinkers who are wont to speak somewhat disparagingly of the representation of Christ as virgin-born; and truly, if we are bound to connect that representation with a doctrine of original sin, we cannot help thinking that it betrays a deficiency of the evangelical spirit, and asking whether its presence in the First Gospel must not be due to some strange accident. If, however, the supposed connexion be a mistake, it becomes possible to hold that the story of the Virgin-Birth has a real religious significance. We cannot indeed affirm that the physiological virginity of the Redeemer's mother has any religious value. But we may find a deep meaning in the story, if regarded, as the early Christian writers regard the "estate of matrimony," symbolically. We may take it, in the first place, as a poetic and popular symbol of a primary religious truth—of the truth that the inestimable blessings which, for us, have their fountain-head in the Crucified, do indeed come from above (John viii. 23), and not from below, are not humanly produced, but have their origin in God. As this is expounded by Dante,—¹

Their wax, and he who shapes it, are howe'er
Of different kind; whence 'neath the Ideal Seal Various degrees of lustre must appear.

More exquisitely if the wax were moulded,
The heavens exerting all their energies,
Then would the Seal's full lustre be unfolded.

Accepting this view, the story expresses a form of thought parallel to, but different from, those of the pre-existence of Christ and of

¹ Paradiso, canto xiii. lines 67-69 (Wright's translation).

His being the very Word of God made flesh.¹ These forms are all equally prized by us as expressive symbols, but we are bound to distinguish them, and must not, in critical writings, use the Johannine phrase "he became flesh" of the Virgin-Birth, however natural this may have been for great church-theologians (see the Nicene Creed), in the age before criticism had come into existence.

But there are still some "fragments that remain," and in gathering them up we may again seek help from Dante, who was preserved, not only by his theological lore from being a shallow thinker, but also by his poetical genius from mistaking symbol for crude fact. The thirty-third canto of the Paradiso shows clearly enough that to mediæval Christians the Virgin Mary was essentially a personification of the divine mercy which both causes and mediates to man the divine pardon. Dante is no rationalist, but he intuitively pierces to the spiritual centre of orthodox theology. Listen to his words, or at least to such a reflexion of their meaning as our language admits.¹

¹ Cp. Lobstein, The Virgin-Birth of Jesus (Crown Theological Library), p. 96; Schmiedel, Encyclopædia Biblica, "Mary," i., §§ 16, 17.

O Virgin Mother, daughter of thy Son!
 Humblest, yet most exalted of our race,
 Forecast of counsel in the Eternal One!

Here unto us a midday torch thou art
 Of Charity; and unto men below
 The living streams of Hope thou dost impart.

Lady, to thee such worth and power are given,
 That whoso grace desires, and asks not thee,
 Desires to fly, without a wing, to heaven.

Thy kindness succoureth not him alone
 Who asks thy aid; but oft spontaneously
 Runs in advance, and is, unasked for, shown.

In thee dwells Mercy—Pity dwells in thee—
 In thee Munificence—in thee abounds
 Whate'er of Goodness may in creature be.

If anyone doubts the theory here proposed, I would ask him to see what our poet says of Beatrice and Lucia. That these figures are essentially personifications, is beyond question, and yet the personification, aided in each case by the ascription of a historic name to the personified abstraction, is so effective that a simple reader might suppose the description to be put forth as historical. And I think that the Christian of to-day may follow Dante in so using a historic name and person. We too, like the sovereign poet, cannot be so absorbed in the child-saviour as to forget His mother. And since we know so little about her historically, we may well be pardoned for using her as a symbol.¹ To some of us the Virgin Mother may be the indispensable poetic symbol of the highest and holiest aspect of the womanly ideal; to others—or indeed to the same persons in a different mood—the equally poetic symbol of a too easily forgotten aspect—the maternal—of the divine nature.

¹ Paradiso, canto xxxiii. lines 1-3 and 10-21.

¹ In doing this we can take no account of the extra-canonical story of Mary (cp. Encyclopædia Biblica, "Mary," i., § 21). This must be obvious. But a little consideration will further show that we must not blur the outlines of our mental picture by borrowing from those references to Mary in our Gospels which are outside the preludes to the First and Third Gospels. Indeed, the real source of the deep Christian feeling towards Mary is Luke i. 26-ii. 19.

We in the West may have been diverted from recognizing this aspect by the repellent form of much Eastern symbolism, but we are the losers by this, as there are some signs that we are now beginning to suspect.¹ The older volume of Scripture contains one passage in which this most touching aspect of the divine nature is beautifully expressed,— “ Can a woman forget a sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? Yea, though [by a very bold imagination] they should forget, yet will I not forget thee ” (Isa. xlix. 15).

I shall not require to be as long in considering the statement, so difficult, and yet as soon as we get the right point of view, so transparent, of the Descent of Christ to the nether world.

¹ Cp. Tyrrell, Lex Orandi, p. 175, “ In the last resort we must see in her (Mary) the revelation of a new aspect of the Divine Goodness, with which we are thus put into fuller and more fruitful communication.” Also Grainger, The Soul of a Christian, p. 186, “ It is a striking fact that a new worship of the Divine Mother is springing up in such a way that her attributes are no longer centred on Mary, but on the Supreme.”

It is given in its fullest form, though without the necessary sequel of the Strong One's victorious exit, in a passage which is probably a later insertion;¹ but is none the less useful as a record of an early form of belief. The passage runs thus, "For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the belly of the sea-monster, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (Matt. xii. 40). There is also an apparently full record in 1 Pet. iii. 18 ff., "Being put to death in the flesh but revived in the spirit, in which also he went and proclaimed to the spirits in ward, who formerly disobeyed, when the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noe." This passage, however, has been much misunderstood, and recent research throws much doubt on the prevalent view that it refers to the descent of Christ into Hades.² A sounder illustration may be derived from the words of Christ in Rev. i. 18, "I am the first and the last, and the Living One; and I was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore, and I have the keys of Death and of Hades," where the second half of the verse is a partly translated myth of the Descent into Hades. From the two passages—Matt. xii. 40 and Rev. i. 18—taken together, we are able to learn that the descent into the "heart of the earth" was a scene in the great drama of the struggle between the divine Redeemer and the dragon of chaos and lawlessness. For the "sea-monster" (κῆτος) in Matthew, like the "great fish" in Jonah, is certainly the dragon (tannîn) of which we read in Job xxvii. 12 and Isa. xxvii. i., li. 9 (cp. Ezek. xxix. 3, xxxii. 2), and which is equivalent to the Tiâmat of the Babylonian epic of Creation.¹ We learn too that the sojourn of three days and three nights in the nether world followed upon the ¹ See Encyclopædia Biblica, "Dragon," "Jonah," § 4. Note that in Jonah ii. 4, the "great fish" is identified with Sheól. The identification may be attested only by the editor who inserted the psalm (Jon. ii.) and called it Jonah's prayer, but is doubtless much earlier. See Encyclopædia Biblica, col. 2570.

¹ See NOTE, p. 251.

² See pp. 103 f.

Redeemer's death, and was succeeded by His triumphant ascension, in which He carried with Him the keys of the city called Death¹ or Hades, as a token of His overlordship. Evidently the death of the Redeemer is here represented, in mythological style, as His being swallowed up by the dragon.² Can we help being reminded of the old myth embodied in Rev. xii., where the dragon is said to have "stood before the woman to devour her child as soon as it was born" (v. 4) ?

This parallelism naturally suggests the idea that the representation of the Christ as having descended into Hades may have been Jewish before it became Christian, and Babylonian before it became Jewish. Nor is the search for evidence altogether fruitless. The Mandæans, that strange sect (not yet extinct) on the banks of the Euphrates, to which I have already referred, and whose highly mixed religious system is Babylonian in its lowest stratum, told of a divine Hero,¹ who was commissioned by his "fathers," the so-called "Great Ones,"² to descend into the nether world, to wage successful war with the king of darkness, and to liberate the souls of the righteous, and restore them to the world of light. The representation of the Hero as fighting with the powers of darkness seems at first sight to fill a gap in the Biblical myth.³ The Christ, as one might think, must have had to fight with these potentates before He could quit the City of Death as a victor. This view would seem to be favoured by the parallelism asserted in Matt. xii. 40 between the experience of Jonah and that of the Christ, and it is very possible that the Jews had a

¹ "Death" (Heb. mdweth) is often a synonym of Sheól (Ps. vi. 5, ix. 13, xxii. 15, lxxviii. 20, lxxxix. 48, cvii. 18, Isa. xxviii. 15; cp. Rev. i. 18, vi. 8 [personification], xx. 13 f.).

² See, however, the next paragraph.

¹ Hibil Ziwa, son of Mandâ d'Hayyê. See Brandt, Mandäische Schriften, pp. 138 ff., cp. pp. 150 ff.; Mand. Religion, pp. 182-184; Gunkel, Schöpfung und Chaos, pp. 364, 382.

² See NOTE IX., p. 250.

³ Let me recall once more that "myth" does not mean "fable."

Messiah-story (now lost) which agreed with the Mandæan in this respect. Evidently, however, the Christian instinct in general was against it. The New Testament writers as a rule prefer to represent the battle between Jesus Christ and the demons as having taken place in His earthly lifetime (see e.g. Matt. xii. 29, Luke x. 18, John xii. 31, xiv. 30, xvi. 11), and the cross as His triumphal throne (Col. ii. 15; cp. John xii. 23, 32).

That the Mandæan story is only a development of a Babylonian myth is evident. The conception of the nether world as a city with gates is certainly in the first instance Babylonian, though it was adopted, probably at an early date, by the Israelites.¹ There is in fact an elaborate Babylonian story of the descent of Istar to the nether City. Possibly it is the sole survivor of a class. For instance, there was surely a story of the Descent of Marduk,¹ which, if we could recover it, would have a prior claim to consideration, Marduk being so clearly analogous to the Jewish and Christian Messiah. But the "Descent of Istar" (now well known through popular as well as learned books on Assyriology) is quite sufficient for illustrative purposes. The story is really a combination of three myths—one in which the goddess descended to the "land without return" under compulsion, a second in which ~~Tammuz~~ Tammuz made the same unavoidable descent, and a third in which Istar went of her own accord to seek for and rescue her dead consort Tammuz.² Just so, the references to the Descent of Christ appear to have been of a twofold character. Sometimes He was compared to the prophet Jonah, who was swallowed up by a "great fish," which is identified in the so-called prayer of Jonah (Jon. ii. 2) with Sheól, and is evidently a degenerate form of the mythic dragon; at other times (and doubtless this became the favourite representation¹) as having entered the City of Death of His own accord, and for a purpose of His own. A few lines may appropriately be quoted here, taken from an early section of the "Descent of Istar," and illustrative of those triumphant words in Rev. i. 18, "I have the keys of Death and of Hades."

¹ See Isa. xxxviii. 10, Jon. ii. 7 (where "earth" is used as a synonym for the subterranean world), Ps. ix. 14, cvii. 18, Job xvii. 16, xxxviii. 17; cp. Wisd. xvi. 13, Psalms of Solomon xvi. 2, Matt. xvi. 18. All, it is true, late passages. The expression "keys of Death" is thoroughly Jewish (see Wetstein or Bousset on Rev. i. 18). Philologically there is no call to seek out a parallel in Mithraism (J. M. Robertson, Pagan Christs, pp. 200, 353); and mythologically Babylonia claims priority.

¹ See Zimmern, K.A.T., 3rd ed., p. 371.

² Cp. Jastrow, Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, pp. 573 ff.

When Istar arrived at the gate of the land without return,²
 She spoke to the watchman of the gate:
 Ho! watchman—open thy gate;
 Open thy gate that I may enter.
 If thou dost not open thy gate, if thou refuseth me admission,
 I will smash the door, break the bolt.
 I will smash the threshold, break open the portals.³

¹ See chaps. xvii.—xxvii. of the apocryphal "Gospel of Nicodemus."

² Less probably, according to Zimmern, "without compassion."

³ Jastrow, Rel. Bab. Ass., pp. 568 f.

What Istar here threatens, the divine Hero of the Mandæans carries out. It is consonant with the dignity of Christ to suppose that all that He required to do, according to the second form of the story, was to threaten, and that the keys of the City of Death were at once yielded up.

We can now return to 1 Pet. iii. 18 ff. Most people suppose that the writer of 1 Peter alludes here to a form of the belief in the Descensus ad inferos, which represented the object of the Christ as being to make a spiritual proclamation to certain imprisoned spirits. Surely this cannot be. The object of the Descent (regarded as a voluntary act of the Christ) must have been the same as that of the divine Hero of the Mandæan belief, viz. to liberate the souls of the righteous of past ages. Recent study of the "Similitudes" in the Book of Enoch, however, leads us to the conviction that the preacher referred to in v. 19 must be Enoch, a hero who, originally of solar origin, receives

(not inappropriately) such wonderful honour in later Jewish literature; indeed, in chap. lxxi. of the Book of Enoch he is even identified with the Son of man, i.e. the Messiah.¹ If so, the only question can be whether the subject of the verb in 1 Pet. iii. 19 is the pre-existent Christ, represented (as the first readers presumably knew) by Enoch, or whether we are to follow Dr Rendel Harris,² and read ἐν φ̄ καῑ Ενωχ, "in which also Enoch (went and made proclamation)." The "spirits in ward" (τοῖς ἐν φυλακῇ πνεύμασιν) will probably be the fallen angels, of whom the so-called Book of Enoch has so much to say.³

I have spoken of the statement of the Descent of Christ into the Underworld as having a mythological origin. What, then, is this origin? The question can now be answered with a probability which will, I suspect, go on increasing. And the explanation is that underlying such accounts is the observation that from time to time certain of the heavenly "lights," and more especially the sun, become invisible.¹

¹ See Baldensperger, Die Messianisch-apokalyptischen Hoffnungen, pp. 17 f.

² See his article in the Expositor, April 1901. Obviously Ενωχ might easily fall out after ἐν φ̄.

³ See Dr Charles's Commentary.

The parallel Egyptian accounts (of which Osiris and the justified Osirian souls are the heroes), not less than the Babylonian "Descent of Istar," and the stories of the Descent into the Underworld of heroes like Ea-bani and Gilgames, besides the Greek myth of Persephone, and the so-called descents into Hades² (καταβάσεις εἰς Ἅιδου), ultimately have the same origin, i.e. were suggested by the same primitive myth.

One important detail still remains to be accounted for. According to Matt. xii. 40 (a valuable early Christian statement, see NOTE x.), the period occupied by the Descent of Christ was three full days and nights. The evangelical traditions too sometimes speak of our Lord as rising "after three days" (e.g. Matt. xxvii. 63), though sometimes (compare the parallel case of the festival of Osiris) they say that the Resurrection was to take place "on the third day" (e.g. Matt. xvi. 21). Similar definitions of time to that in Matt. xii. 40 are often given in traditional religious statements. Jonah's three days in the fish have been already mentioned. In Rev. xii. 14 the Messiah's mother is said to have been "nourished for a time and times and half a time," which is parallel to statements in Dan. vii. 25 and xii. 7. In Rev. xi. 9, 11 the two witnesses slain by the dragon lie dead for three days and a half, and then arise and ascend to heaven. In the Mandæan story, Mandâ d'Hayyê (the father of the divine Hero already referred to) is called a "little boy of three years and one day."¹ In the Greek myth of Leto (see NOTE II.), Apollo slays the serpent Pytho on the fourth day after his birth, and in the cultus of the Phrygian deity Attis the festival of his resurrection takes place on the fourth day^x after the lamentations over his death.

¹ Cp. Zimmern, K.A.T., 3rd ed., p. 388.

² Cp. Dieterich, Eine Mithrasliturgie, p. 182.

¹ Brandt, Mandäische Religion, pp. 218 f.

Nor ought I to leave unmentioned that the duration of such a period as is referred to in Dan. vii. 25 and xii. 7 is given in a Babylonian text as three months, ten days, and half a day.¹

It is not very difficult to account for the three months (or three months and a little more) in some of these statements. From our present point of view, it means the period from the winter solstice to the vernal equinox² — a most fit symbol for the afflictive domination of the powers of evil upon earth. But can we explain the three days in the same way? Some explanation certainly is demanded.

¹ These parallels are given by Gunkel (Zum religiösen Verständnis, etc., pp. 80–82), except the last but one, which comes from Pfeleiderer (Das Christusbild, p. 69, note 1). For the last see Zimmern (K.A.T., 3rd ed., p. 389), who also mentions the three days of the Adonis-festival in spring. On Attis and Adonis a general reference must suffice to Frazer's learned and acute Golden Bough.

² Cp. Gunkel, Schöpfung, p. 390; Zimmern, K.A.T., 3rd ed., p. 389.

The apostle Paul, when he says (1 Cor. xv. 3, 4) that Christ died and that He rose again "according to the Scriptures," in reality points to a pre-Christian sketch of the life of Christ, partly—as we have seen—derived from widely-spread non-Jewish myths, and embodied in Jewish writings.¹ May we hold that the statement "three days and three nights" was taken from one such myth, and the statement "two days" (implied in "on the third day") from another?² And, to account for the three days, may we suppose that this specification is merely a modification of the three months, i.e. that it meant originally the period of winter? The sense produced would certainly be a good one, viz. that while the gracious, kindly God, or divine Hero, is in the nether world the upper world of men

¹ See NOTE XI., p. 252.

² J. M. Robertson's Christianity and Mythology was not at hand when the above was written. He says (p. 405, n. 7), "The confusion of the Gospels as to the time between Jesus' death and resurrection is doubtless due to the fact that other cults varied in this respect." It is only just to Robertson to mention this.

undergoes a winter of misery. But I think that we are bound to look further, and seek for another solution of the problem which will adequately account for the "three days." May not Prof. Winckler be right in supposing that the three days were borrowed from another myth relative to the moon-god, and that originally they were the days during which, near the time of the new moon in spring, the moon becomes invisible?¹ The same scholar is also of opinion that the forty days between the Resurrection and the Ascension of Christ² may originally (i.e. in a pre-Christian myth out of which the Jewish and Christian representations grew) have meant the forty days during which, as the ancients well knew, the Pleiades become invisible.³ In this case the forty days of the evangelical tradition were properly the interval between the death and the resurrection of Christ; i.e. from a purely archæological point of view, the Resurrection and the Ascension were one and the same thing.¹ In fact, the resurrection and ascension of the solar heroes were naturally identical, and the archæological theory here expounded is that myths of solar deities supplied details for the close of that story of the Messiah, which, according to a highly satisfying theory, preceded the appearance of the Christ of history.

¹ Geschichte Israels, ii. 84; cp. Zimmern, op. cit., pp. 362, 366, 384, 389.

² Acts i. 3, the only passage where the interval is specified.

³ On the importance of the Pleiades in antiquity, see Winckler, op. cit., p. 83, and cp. Enc. Biblica, col. 4781.

But I cannot and ought not to leave this important matter here. In spite of a Churchman's natural inclination to a reverential reticence, I am bound to say that the form of the spiritual truth of Christ's Resurrection and Ascension can be explained by archæology. Provisionally and tentatively it may be possible to explain the form in each case as a postulate of faith, but in the light of what has been shown to be the probable origin of the form of the belief in the Descent, we cannot consider this explanation very plausible. That there are mythic parallels for the statement (less emphasized in our documents than we might have expected) of the Ascension is beyond question. Not to dwell on the myths of Adonis and Heracles, the Babylonian solar deities who "descend" (arádu) necessarily "ascend" (elú) afterwards. There are also Ascensions which are not preceded by Descents into the Underworld, e.g., that of Mithra the solar deity,¹ so famous in later times. One is also reminded of the Babylonian story of Etana,² the proud boast of Israel's oppressor in Isa. xiv. 13, and the Egyptian statements (which, as I have noticed, occur already in the Pyramid Texts) of the ascent of the Egyptian kings into heaven.³ Nor must one be debarred from mentioning the Old Testament stories of Enoch¹ and Elijah, and the ascensions spoken of imaginatively in later Jewish literature (Moses, Levi, Isaiah), together with the definite statement in the Apocalypse of Baruch (xxx. 1) that the Messiah "shall return into glory."² Must we not therefore admit that the Ascension, like the Descent, is a wide-spread form of belief, and that this form of belief is ultimately derived from a primitive Oriental myth?

¹ Zimmern expresses this view (op. cit., p. 389).

¹ See Dieterich, Eine Mithrasliturgie (1903), p. 184.

² See Zimmern, K.A.T., 3rd ed., pp. 564 ff.; Jastrow, Rel. of Bab. and Ass., pp. 519 ff.

³ Cp. the popular stories of the translation of Romulus and of Alexander the Great (without death), and of Julius and Augustus Cæsar (after death).

If so, does it not at once become probable that the form of the belief in (or spiritual truth of) the Resurrection of Christ is also of mythic origin? I am aware that some learned

¹ See Encyclopædia Biblica, "Enoch." The popular tendency to believe in ascensions appears in Deut. xxx. 12, "Who shall go up for us to heaven," and Assumption of Moses, x. 9, "And God will exalt thee, and He will cause thee to approach to the heaven of the stars" (cp. Isa. xiv. 13).

² Cp. Charles, ad loc.; Baldensperger, Die Messianisch-apokalypt. Hoffnungen, p. 164, note 1. Both Charles and Ryssel (in Kautzsch's German Apocrypha) render "in glory." But surely "into glory" gives the writer's meaning better.

Anglican theologians consider the Resurrection of our Lord to be not merely a matter of faith but a historically proved fact. I will not now enter upon an examination of passages which has been made often enough, but simply ask, Have these theologians given a long study to Oriental mythology? This is a subject which cannot be taken up profitably under compulsion; rather it is one which the student must grow into by degrees. We cannot on this ground venture to neglect it, but we ought not to be hasty in forming conclusions respecting it. Without claiming infallibility, I hope that I have complied with the necessary conditions, and won the right to express a judgment on the theory before us. I hold, then, that the form of the statement of our Lord's Resurrection does, from an archæological point of view, appear to be of mythic origin. But this is far from exhausting my meaning. As a student of religion, I distinguish between the form of the truth that is believed and the very truth itself. I lay no small stress upon this, but I must not say more at present, because I have first to mention those mythic stories of resurrection with which the outward form of the Gospel narratives of the Resurrection of Christ must inevitably be compared.

Here, as in other cases, it is highly important to limit our field of investigation. Our instances shall be taken from Babylonia, Egypt, Phoenicia, and Phrygia. The Babylonian deity of the springtide sun (Marduk), who died, also rose again; his chief festival went by the name of the "standing up" (tabû).¹ It was the festival of the New Year at the time of the vernal equinox. Resurrection too enters into the elaborate Egyptian myth of Osiris, who after a violent death lived on (as the sun of yesterday lives on in the sun of to-day) in the person of his son Horus. Adonis and Attis also were said to have revived after death, and, like Osiris and Marduk, were honoured by yearly festivals.

¹ Zimmern, op. cit., p. 371. The beautiful epithet of Marduk, "who loveth to make the dead to live," according to Zimmern, is not a reference to the possibility of a resurrection, but means "who loveth to heal those who are sick unto death."

Surely it must be clear (1) that the view presented of the possible origin of this form of belief is not exposed to the objections raised to the various vision-hypotheses, and (2) that the hold which the bodily resurrection of Jesus Christ obtained upon the Church can now be plausibly accounted for.

Now too we can perhaps more easily account for the early Christian transformation of the sense of certain Old Testament passages, such as Isa. liii. 10 and Ps. xvi. 10. The transformation seems to have been unconsciously effected, and in the first instance by the Jews to justify the belief in the Messiah's resurrection derived from a wide-spread mythic tradition. The Christians (see 1 Cor. xv. 4 and parallels) only followed the example of the Jews. It was natural that both Jews and Christians should look out for previsions of this great event in the Scriptures, the received interpretation of prophecy having become largely eschatological.

In speaking of "the Jews," I mean, of course, not the whole community or its official leaders, but only a certain section of the people.

It is perfectly right to ask how the Christian faith is affected by this hypothesis. To this it may frankly be answered that it is not affected at all. The discovery that a form of belief is of non-historical origin (i.e. belongs to another sphere than that of history) has nothing to do with the truth or falsehood of the belief itself. Whatever else can be subverted by criticism, the belief in the resurrection of Christ is safe. More than this I need not say now. It is time that I should attempt to show what is the essence of the three companion-beliefs, the Descent, the Resurrection, and the Ascension,—that essence which, to a fair-minded student, is independent of criticism. In order to run the least risk of alienating those whom I desire to carry with me, I shall borrow all that I can from a supreme Christian poet, and something too from a singularly open-minded Roman Catholic writer of our own day. If Father

Tyrrell can display such truly Christian candour and such reverence for historical facts, no one can take offence if I too, as a Christian historian, seek to manifest these qualities, and if, going (I hope I may say) only a little beyond him, I draw a distinction between a semi-mythic narrative and the spiritual truths, or beliefs, to which, at the period of the formation of Christianity, it gave the necessary vehicle.

First, as to the Descent into Hades. If the form of this belief is ultimately a myth, it is at any rate, as transfigured by Christians, a very significant myth. The leading idea of it seems to me to be that Christ, to whom (according to the grand conception of the primitive Christians) the Crucifixion was not a defeat but a victory, would not be glorified alone, but determined to be accompanied by a multitude of righteous spirits. According to this view the Descent into Hades is only the first stage of the Ascension—of an Ascension in which Christ was certainly the most prominent but not the only figure. To show this a supreme poet was required, and this poet we have in the author of the Divine Comedy. It is hardly too much to say that no prose description could possibly equal the grandeur of the third and fourth lines of the following passage, at least in the original :—¹

Then he, to whom my covert thought was known,
 Gave answer : I had lately reached this round,
 When lo ! arrived a great and glorious Guest,
 Whose head with wreath of victory was crowned.
 The soul of man's first Parent hence he drew,
 Abel his son, and also Noah's shade,
 Moses the lawgiver, and, just and true,
 The Patriarch Abraham ; David,—Israel,
 His father, and his sons that call obeyed,
 And Rachel fair, whose love he earned so well.
 For these and many others grace he gained :
 Know—that till these with happiness were blest,
 No human souls salvation e'er obtained.

Underneath this fine description lies the very

¹ Inferno, canto iv., lines 51–54, Wright's translation. The lines specially referred to above for their grandeur occur in the speech of Virgil in reply to a question put by Dante. The devout Roman poet answers,—

(Rispose :) Io era nuovo in questo stato,
 Quando ci vidi venire un possente
 Con segno di vittoria incoronato.

idea which, according to Mr Tyrrell, constitutes the special religious value of the belief in the Descent, viz. "that Christ is the redeemer of all men from the beginning to the end; one whose day even Abraham rejoiced to see; that He is the realization of the dreams of the old-world seers and prophets."¹

Next, as to the Ascension. We have seen that the form of this belief, being the correlative of that of the Descent (cp. Eph. iv. 9), may very possibly be of mythic origin. If this be accepted, we have to consider what is the essential underlying truth. Let us, then, suppose that, by a mystery of heavenly wisdom, a star-spirit has disappeared in the underworld; what follows from this? Surely to an ancient believer in myths it would be self-evident that the star-spirit will at length reappear in the heaven to which he belongs. Using this as a symbol of religious thought, does not the Christian conscience affirm that if a personality, filled with the divine Spirit, passes out of sight, it must afterwards again become visible, and this time in all its beauty and resplendent majesty, in "Jerusalem that is above, which is our mother" (Gal. iv. 26, Revised Version)? And if, from the same point of view, we regard this mythically expressed statement as the symbol of an inward experience, must we not say—slightly altering and expanding Mr Tyrrell's words¹—that "the exaltation of humanity through the death of self-sacrifice" is "embodied and set forth symbolically in the † phenomenal order" in the crown of all the Ascension stories, the narrative of the Ascension of Christ?² Such an idea, for which Eph. ii. 1, 6 may be compared, appears to me to give a still richer meaning to the narrative, and it is certainly unaffected by the mythological origin which the new school would now assign to it.

¹ Tyrrell, Lex Orandi, p. 181.

Lastly, as to the Resurrection. Here too I can only venture to report, so far as I am able, the affirmations of the Christian conscience. First, then, among the truths affirmed by that conscience is the uniqueness of Jesus Christ's personality, from which follows, by a necessary inference of faith, its indestructibility. Apart from all theological formulations, it remains true to the Christian that One who was in such close and constant communion with God, and had such keen spiritual insight, and such potent spiritual influence, could not become like a quenched lamp, or be reduced to the shadowy, negative existence assigned to the departed by the later Jews. Those who draw the above necessary inference will naturally go on to regard the spiritual Resurrection of Christ (which they also infer) as involving the spiritual resurrection of His followers, and at the same time as a symbol of the new moral life of redeemed humanity and of each of its members¹ (cp. Eph. ii. 1, 5 f.; Col. ii. 12 f.).

¹ Lex Orandi, p. 184.

² Mark xvi. 19 (in the appended passage; see Enc. Bibl., cols. 1767, 1880), Luke xxiv. 51, Acts i. 9-11; cp. Luke ix. 51, John xx. 17.

Others, however, will go still further, and affirm that a body is necessary to the integrity of human nature, from which they will infer the bodily Resurrection both of Christ and of His followers. This surely is the affirmation of the ordinary Christian conscience. How this is possible, conscience cannot say. The favourite theory,¹ that the human spirit after death will be free to organize a suitable spiritual body from its new environment, does not belong to the sphere of the conscience, which, however, by one of faith's inferences, may affirm the resurrection-body of Christ to have been suitably glorious, and to be typical of that of His true followers.

¹ Cp. Tyrrell, op. cit., p. 184.

All this is, of course, absolutely unaffected by archæological criticism of the form of the Christian belief in the Lord's Resurrection. The great question is whether we have that faith in Jesus which enables us to infer from His spiritual nature, as represented in the Synoptic Gospels, that He must have "passed from death unto life"—unto a new and glorious life with His heavenly Father. If criticism claims perfect liberty, so also does the Christian conscience, and such inferences of faith as I have described cannot be overthrown by criticism.

¹ On St Paul's teaching, see Prof. Charles, Encyclopædia Biblica, "Eschatology," § 99.

To sum up what I have been saying last. The four forms of Christian belief which we have been considering are the Virgin-birth of Jesus Christ, His Descent into the nether world, His Resurrection, and His Ascension. On the ground of facts supplied by archæology, it is plausible to hold that all these arose out of a pre-Christian sketch of the life, death,¹ and exaltation of the expected Messiah, itself ultimately derived from a widely current mythic tradition respecting a solar deity. There is, of course, nothing disparaging to the Christian beliefs in such a theory, for before this tradition had been (in part) appropriated by pious Jews (from whom it passed to the followers of Jesus of Nazareth) it was already, by a natural fitness—or shall we say?—by a divine overruling, becoming on a small scale the story of a divine Redeemer. Still the Christianized story of the opening and the closing scenes of the earthly life of the Redeemer has acquired a special right of existence through the essential Christian truths enshrined in it. To these truths, which required and found a suitable casket, the faith of the Christian is pledged. The chief of them are,—the uniqueness of the personality of the Lord Jesus, and the immense worth of His act of absolute self-sacrifice; then, by inference, the indestructibleness of His personality, its perpetual redemptive capacity, and its identity with that manward aspect of the Divine Nature, so full of mingled grandeur and compassion, which, by early efforts of theological thought, acquired the names of the Messiah, the Son of God, the Word of God. If this explanation be wrong, let a theory which accounts better for all the various facts be brought forward. If, however, it commends itself to those who would fain adjust our Church to the progress of knowledge, let it be viewed in all its bearings, corrected and improved, and then allowed to form part of the common heritage of educated Christian people.

¹ See NOTE XI., p. 252.

PART III

NOT long ago I was speaking of the statement of the Virgin-Birth of Christ, and the slight attestation it receives in the earliest Christian records. The discovery which I have next to mention has a close bearing on this subject. It belongs to the domain of textual criticism, which some of those who are fond of large views are perhaps too much inclined to neglect. They forget that without textual criticism the large views of historical essayists would lack an assured basis, and their conclusions be involved in uncertainty. The time, however, has come when all students must take more account of textual criticism, and recognize that a new day has dawned upon it. I cannot help thinking that even the popular mind has begun to suspect what is happening, thanks to this discovery. You will guess what it is when I add the names of the discoverers, Mrs Gibson and Mrs Lewis. In the Syriac manuscript found by these two learned Cambridge ladies in the library of the Sinai convent, and published by them in 1894, this is how the last error in the first of the two genealogies of Jesus Christ was found to run: "Jacob begat Joseph; Joseph, to whom was betrothed Mary the virgin, begat Jesus, who is called the Christ" (Matt. i. 16).

The discovery is certainly a valuable one, but some popular writers in 1894 exaggerated its degree of importance, when they ventured to surmise that we had at last found out the original text of the passage. Not much experience is required to suggest caution. "To whom was betrothed Mary the virgin," and "who is called the Christ," have all the appearance of being parenthetical insertions. It so happens that we have long had a mass of variants which also point back to an earlier textual type than that represented by the official text, but which were almost useless,¹ for want of a sufficient amount of insight on the part of critics in general. Fortunately, however, by the time that the Gibson-Lewis manuscript was published, textual criticism had made such advances that special scholars were able to make the most of it in connexion with the previously existing critical material.²

That the original text was distinctly Ebionite, i.e. that it was the work of one who believed that our Lord was the son of Joseph,³ cannot be liable to doubt. In this respect it agrees with the genealogy in Luke iii.

¹ See Encyclopædia Biblica, "Mary," i., §§ 13, 14, and cp. "Gospels," § 22.

² See the correspondence in the Academy, from Nov. 17, 1894, to June 19, 1895; also Conybeare, Hibbert Journal, vol. i. (1902-1903), pp. 96-102.

³ Irenæus (iii. 21, 1) says that the Ebionites declared Jesus to have been the son of Joseph, following those who interpreted "virgin" in Isa. vii. 14 as "young woman," and Eusebius (Hist. Eccles., vi. 17) that Symmachus the Ebionite rests his heresy on Matthew's Gospel. See especially Encyclopædia Biblica, "Mary," i., § 15.

23-38 ;¹ for no critical student can fail to see that the text of v. 23 has been interfered with in various ways, and originally stated positively that Jesus was the son of Joseph.² It is right to add that "there survive even now traces of a dislocation between them and the Gospels in which they are incorporated." Indeed, any reader can see that the First Gospel begins best with "The birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise," and that Luke iii. 32, "And the Holy Spirit descended . . . upon him," is followed most naturally by "And Jesus, full of the Holy Spirit, returned from Jordan." If, however, we remove the genealogies, there is no trace left in those two Gospels of the representation of the true Messiah as born of a virgin. Yet who can say that the view of Jesus Christ that they give is not one that touches the heart and may transfigure the life?

¹ Dr A. Wright remarks that the genealogies in Matthew and Luke "seem to have been the work of Hebrew Christians, probably of Ebionites" (Synopsis of the Gospels in Greek, p. 257).

² See Encyclopædia Biblica, "Gospels," § 22; "Mary," i., § 7, with note 1.

For two companion facts of textual criticism I will go to Mr Conybeare. This zealous Oxford scholar has produced from the so-called "Dialogue of Timothy and Aquila"¹ a fresh confirmation of the view that the original reading in the first of the two genealogies was simply "and Jacob begat Joseph, and Joseph begat Jesus, who is called Christ." This is in fact cited by Aquila the Jew as the text of the passage in Matthew, only after "begat Joseph" the text of the Dialogue gives "the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus who is called Christ." Mr Conybeare has also shown that Eusebius quotes that famous passage Matt. xxviii. 19 at least eighteen (one may now say twenty-five) times in the form "Go ye, and make disciples of all nations in my name," without the words

¹ Edited by Conybeare, Anecdota Oxoniensia Classica, 8th series, 1898, p. 76; cp. pp. xix-xxii. See Schmiedel's criticism, Encycl. Biblica, "Mary," i., § 13.

“baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit.”¹ He has moreover shown reason to believe that both Aphraates and Justin Martyr were ignorant of the now generally received reading,² and he has offered the very probable conjecture that the words referred to are an interpolation which was first made in the African text of the Gospel, and which afterwards spread to other local texts.

Surely this could not be omitted in a survey of some of the new facts which appear to justify a more searching criticism of the Bible. As Professor Kirsopp Lake, in his recent inaugural lecture, remarks,—

We shall have to consider, for instance, in the case of the catholic custom and doctrine of Baptism, how far it is really based on the interpolated (if it be interpolated) text of Matt. xxviii. 19, and how far it is independent. That baptism is a primitive and catholic custom is beyond all question. It has been usual to trace the origin of that custom to Christ's commands as reported in Matt. xxviii. 19 and Mark xvi. 16. If textual criticism really makes it doubtful that those passages are part of the original text, then it is clearly the duty of the student of early Christian literature to ask whether there is any other evidence that baptism was ordained by Christ, and whether the suggestion is not worth consideration that baptism was a Jewish custom, sanctioned by Christ as an initiatory ceremony, and regarded by the early Church as a necessary and essential rite.¹

¹ See Conybeare, Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft, 1901, pp. 275 ff.; Hibbert Journal, i., 1902, pp. 102 ff.

² Cp. Diettrich, Die nestorianische Taufliturgie (1903), where, in confirmation of Conybeare's view, it is pointed out that the baptismal liturgy of the Nestorians is without the passage Matt. xxviii. 19.

Said I not right that a new day is dawning on the textual criticism of the New Testament, and may I not hope that here, as in all other branches of study, the pain attendant on the removal of prejudices will be the precursor of a keen delight in a fuller revelation of historical reality?

Such are a few of the new facts bearing on the criticism of the New Testament. I have mentioned only those that have some special interest for ordinary Bible students at the present moment, and for the most part those which have some relation to studies of my own. To New Testament archæology in the usual sense of the word, as understood and partly re-created by Professor Ramsay, I have made no reference. This of course implies no want of interest on my part, but only that the present work has its necessary limitations. I am well aware that a thorough re-examination of the critical views of all the various schools is urgently needed, and that both archæology such as Professor Ramsay and likeminded scholars cultivate and also the newer textual criticism will give invaluable help to those who may be brave enough to undertake it.

¹ The Influence of Textual Criticism on the Exegesis of the New Testament: an Inaugural Lecture delivered before the University of Leiden, on January 27, 1904, by Kirsopp Lake (Oxford, 1904), pp. 22 f.

PART IV

I NOW turn to the Old Testament, first expressing the hope that I may not thereby contribute to the propping up of the ancient error that the New Testament is the direct continuation of the Old. Students should now at length be beginning to realize that the most various influences contributed to form the intellectual and spiritual milieu in which alone the Gospel could have arisen, and any new fact which enables us to understand this milieu better is a fact of high importance for Bible-study. Such a work as Bousset's on Jewish Religion in the Age of the New Testament (Berlin, 1903) is full of new facts of this kind, and each new publication of Dr R. H. Charles is almost an event in Bible-study, through the abundance of its new contributions to the study of Judaism. Into these facts I cannot here enter, though glimpses of some of them have naturally been given in speaking of one section of the Book of Revelation. Nor can I even consider the bearings of the discovery of fragments of the Hebrew Ecclesiasticus,¹ which ought to become fruitful both for the comprehension of Ben Sira's work, and for textual criticism generally. The new facts of which I shall speak here are primarily facts of archæology, including especially Assyriology.

Some students may remark, "So the Old Testament critics are being converted to a belief in Assyriological research." I am afraid there is a popular misunderstanding on this point, for which an old and much-valued friend of my own—Professor Sayce—is unfortunately responsible. Again and again this eager scholar speaks in widely circulated books and booklets as if the higher critics were neglectful of Assyriology. The critics have protested, but the accusations continue to pour on them with but little mitigation. But surely Professor Sayce has fallen into an error. Can it be that he is thinking of a single critic, who bulks so largely in his mind that he involuntarily speaks of him as a multitude?—I mean Wellhausen, who, in his zeal for Arabic, is still perhaps tempted to keep Assyrian at arm's length, and certainly has not found time to come to terms with his Assyriological opponents.

¹ See NOTE XII., p. 254.

Surely, too, Professor Sayce greatly exaggerates when he gives us to understand that Assyriological researches have subverted, or are subverting, the whole fabric of the higher criticism. Perhaps his language is not intended to be taken quite literally, but it justly surprises many who are aware that important parts of the material of that fabric are built into the structure of his own theory of the Old Testament. Here again, like the German critic who stands nearest to him, Fritz Hommel, he is too much under the fascination of a single eminent name — that of Wellhausen. For clearly, by the phrase “higher critics” he really means the same thing that Hommel means by the appalling word “Wellhausenian.”¹ But it should be noticed that while “higher critics” in general do agree with Kuenen and Wellhausen in their general arrangement of the component parts of the Old Testament, yet they are willing and almost eager to modify many of the details, and in particular to admit the existence of early elements in works which, as they stand, must be called late.

Still, I have no wish to deny that the so-called “higher critics” in the past were as a rule unduly suspicious of Assyriology as a young and (as they thought) too self-assertive science, and that many of those who now recognize its contributions to knowledge are somewhat too mechanical in the use of it, and too sceptical as to the influence of Babylonian culture in relatively early times on Syria, Palestine, and even Arabia. And therefore for the exhortation to "consider their ways and be wise," and to expand their aims and methods, I will admit that thanks are due to Professors Sayce and Hommel, and still more to a very different scholar—Professor Hugo Winckler, whose deficient interest in religion and excessive self-reliance must not deter us from learning from a critic who has so keen an eye for new problems whensoever we can.¹

¹ For Hommel's own critical views on the Pentateuch see his pamphlet, Die altorientalischen Denkmäler und das Alte Testament (Berlin, 1903), pp. 13-17.

For my own part, I maintain strongly that the criticism, philology, and archæology of the Old Testament are already much indebted to ¹ Winckler's short work, Abraham als Babylonier, Joseph als Aegypter (Berlin, 1903), presents some of his views in the form least likely to give offence to conservative readers. But for a conspectus of all his results we must turn to the first half of the third edition of Schrader's Die Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament (1902). On this great work, the second part of which is by H. Zimmern, see my article, "Babylon and the Bible," Hibbert Journal, Oct. 1903, pp. 65 ff.

Assyriology. The student must, however, be on his guard against the "falsehood of extremes." We do most urgently want a new guide¹ and a much revised criticism, but before we can follow Winckler without reserve on the paths on which he would conduct us, we must, I think, be more convinced that he sees his way clearly enough in textual criticism. Although he is at home in the Hebrew Bible as well as in the inscriptions, it cannot be said that he applies the same critical standard to the received text consistently, nor indeed does he appear to have had an adequate preliminary experience. In some parts of his Old Testament work he is much too unsuspecting; in others (take for instance his treatment of Judg. v. and Ps. xxii.), not perhaps too suspicious, but too unmethodical in his criticism. In other departments, too, he is sometimes, as it seems to me, not strict enough in his criticism, and then again sometimes really hypercritical, especially in his application of the mythological key and in his theory (so suggestive in its details) of the later history of Israel. In his treatment of religion, moreover, as I have already remarked, he is far from satisfactory, owing to his unfortunate lack of religious sympathy. With all his earnestness and acuteness, he has not succeeded in making it probable that prophecy, even in its political aspect, can be explained from Babylonia.¹ And neither he nor anyone else has been able to show that the course of the development of the idea of Yahwè (miswritten, since the Reformation period, Jehovah) can be altogether paralleled in Babylonia. That Babylonian and perhaps Arabian influences affected that development at certain points, need not be denied. But the predominant character of the religion of Israel refuses to be accounted for by the "pan-Babylonian" theory.

¹ On new guides see article, "Babylon and the Bible," referred to in preceding note.

Having said what was necessary of the limitations of Professor Winckler (whose enemy I cannot be, for I have more than once come forward in his defence, and whom with a recent German writer I regard as the most stimulative scholar at work on these matters), I now take up a new division of my subject. My aim is to give a conspectus of some of the new facts, important for Old Testament study, for which we are indebted to Assyriology, to Egyptology, and to what in a slightly narrow sense is commonly known among us as archæology. If these facts do not subvert the fabric of the new critical tradition, they at any rate compel lovers of truth to revise, correct, and expand it. This may be a new point of view for some of my hearers, but must I not claim some respect for it on the part of liberal-minded Churchmen?

¹ See NOTE XIII., p. 255, and cp. the article mentioned already.

(1) The first specimen - fact that I shall mention is a complex one; it relates, or is thought to relate, to a group of names in the fourteenth chapter of Genesis. In all recent works on this difficult book you will find it noticed that several kings of Elam bore names beginning with Kudur, and that an Elamite goddess bore the name Lagamar, from which it is inferred that Chedorlaomer is a genuine historical name. Further, that a very ancient king of Larsa, the Babylonian city of the sun-god, was called Rim-sin, or, in the Sumerian language, Eri-aku, which is thought to be the same as Arioch; for some reason or other—it is supposed—the ancient Hebrew writer used by preference the less natural name Eri-aku, which has become Arioch. Next, it is noticed, quite correctly, as a brilliant discovery, that a king of Babylon, who was, both as a conqueror and as a ruler, one of the greatest kings of the East, was called Hammurabi; he lived in the third millennium B.C.¹ The question then arises, Does this name occur in a recognizable form in Genesis xiv.? The orthodox theory among both Assyriologists and Hebraists is that the great king's name appears in v. 1 as Amraphel.¹

¹ See The Letters and Inscriptions of Hammurabi. By L. W. King. Three volumes, 1898–1900.

This requires us indeed to suppose that "Shinar," for some unknown reason, was preferred to the more natural "Bâbel" (i.e. Babylon); but we know that the Septuagint sometimes (see Isa. xi. 11, Zech. v. 11), though unfortunately not in Gen. xiv. 1, equates "Shinar" and "Babylonia." Add to this that "Ellasar" is not very unlike "Larsa," that Elam (Assyrian, Êlama, Êlamtu) is the Assyrian name of a country east of Babylonia, and that the Elamites were a conquering race, and appear at the right time for this theory to have claimed suzerainty over Syria and Palestine. Such are the considerations now being urged by not a few archæological critics of Genesis.

I should very much like, however, to call in a candid liberal critic, uncommitted to theories, and ask him what he says to all this. Certainly he would be surprised to learn that the Hebrew writer not only believed in the existence of Abraham, but was even able to determine approximately his date. And he would not, I think, be free from the fear that this may be too good to be true. To this perhaps an equally candid conservative would be ready with a reply. Cuneiform tablets have been lately found at Lachish, Gezer, and Taanach. The oldest monument of alphabetic writing in Palestine (the stone of king Mesha) is not older than the ninth century B.C., and Professor Winckler even supposes¹ that cuneiform continued to be used for official purposes after that time. Granted that the scribe "made a muddle"² of the names; what more natural, if he was a bad scholar? On the other hand, the uncommitted liberal critic would certainly hold that, taking Gen. xiv. as a whole, it cannot possibly be in its original form, and would ask whether we can base arguments, as the commentators do, on the present forms of the names? Professor Driver indeed, the latest commentator, does not suggest serious textual corruption. He recognizes, however, the chief historical difficulties, and the occasion did not perhaps seem to demand that he should probe the text. Winckler at any rate admits that the narrative has passed through several phases.¹ Gunkel, too, in a general way, admits this, but thinks the internal difficulties cannot be adequately explained by supposing the chapter to be of composite origin.² This is certainly true, and indicates that the "muddling" work of the scribes needs to be more searchingly criticized. The sum of the matter is that the "new fact," if used as a key to the existing text, settles nothing, but both justifies and requires a much more searching and complete criticism of the text and of its contents.

¹ See NOTE XIV., p. 260.

¹ Altorientalische Forschungen, 3rd series, i. 165-174.

² Johns, Expositor, Oct. 1903, p. 286.

(2) Our second new fact is the connexion

¹ Geschichte Israels, ii. 32 ff.

² Genesis (in the Handkommentar), 1st ed., p. 265.

of the S. Babylonian city of Uru and the Mesopotamian city of H̄arran with the worship of the Babylonian moon-god Sin. We are told in Gen. xi. 31 that Terah and Abram spent some time, first in Ur-kasdim (Ur of the Chaldees?), and then in Haran. If Ur-kasdim is Uru, and Haran is H̄arran, and if the historical existence of Abram has previously been ascertained, we have a right to ask, What is the inner meaning of this specially reported fact—the residence of Abram and his family first in one city of the moon-god[†] and then in another, before their migration to Canaan? Had Terah and Abram some degree of religious sympathy with the worship of Sin, the moon-god, just as Joseph may conceivably (if chronology and other details favour this view) have sympathized with the worship of the solar disk which was made the state-religion of Egypt by Amen-hotep IV. (Chuen-aten)? And did they leave the sphere of direct Babylonian religious influence because Hammurabi had signalized his unification of Babylonia by making Marduk (Merodach) the chief Babylonian deity instead of Sin? These are mere conjectures, but they are at least critical conjectures.¹ It is true that, according to the usual critical view, the Priestly Writer (P), who represents Abram's residence in Haran as consequent on a migration from Ur, harmonizes two distinct traditions. But at any rate the fact remains that tradition connects Abram with two moon-cities. We cannot, however, leave the matter thus. There are reasons for doubting the identification of Ur-kasdim with the S. Babylonian city Uru. Plausible as Professor Winckler's theory may be, it has only this justification,—that it accounts, or seems to account, for Abram's residence in a moon-city, or in two moon-cities. But what if the original tradition did not identify the starting-point of Abram's migration with the moon-city Uru? Of course, it is always possible to hope that the spade of the excavator may bring something to light which will prove, or at least support, some cherished theory. But as yet no proof at all has been offered for the assumption that Ur-kasdim is represented by the ruins of el-Muḳayyar, six miles south of the Euphrates. Those ruins do undoubtedly represent the ancient Uru, but between Ur-kasdim and Uru a great gulf is fixed, for Uru was never called Uru of the Chaldeans. Consequently all that our second new fact (see above) proves for the Old Testament student is that we require a much more searching criticism of the narratives relative to Ur-kasdim than has yet been given.¹

¹ See Winckler, Abraham als Babylonier, etc. (already referred to); but cp. Enc. Biblica, "Abraham," § 4, iii.

(3) Our third fact is the discovery (made in Dec. 1901–Jan. 1902, by M. J. de Morgan, on the site of the ancient Susa) of the code of Hammurabi,—that is, of the very king who, as recent writers infer from Gen. xiv. 1, was a vassal of the great king of Elam, but who afterwards threw off the supremacy of Elam, and himself became over-lord of Syria and Palestine. May we venture to assume that, not only the Babylonian language and script obtained currency among the official class of Palestine, but also, if not the code of Hammurabi himself, at any rate legal rules which were analogous to, or a reflexion of, those contained in that code? Do we find that the so-called patriarchal narratives of Genesis presuppose legal usages in accordance with the code of Hammurabi?¹ Is there any contrast in this respect between those narratives and the earliest extant Israelitish law-book (the Book of the Covenant)? These problems directly concern the student of the history of Israel, and their study should help to bring about a more thorough and penetrating study of the Pentateuch. It is possible enough that in considering them fresh problems may arise which may greatly surprise us; but if our object is truth, we cannot be otherwise than pleased at this result.

¹ See Enc. Biblica, "Ur of the Chaldees," § 5, and note that Jensen the Assyriologist has also of late shown himself inclined to separate Ur-kasdim from the moon-city Uru (K.A.T., 3rd ed., p. 365, note 1).

¹ This question is answered in the affirmative by J. Jeremias, Moses und Hammurabi (1903), and D. H. Müller, Die Gesetze Hammurabi's (1903). See, however, G. Wildeboer, De Patriarchen des Ouden Verbonds en de Wetgeving van Hammoerabi (1904), and cp. Kohler and Peiser, Hammurabi's Gesetze, i. (1904), p. 143. C. H. W. Johns' article in Hastings, Bible Dictionary (extra volume), I have not yet seen (July 31, 1904). S. A. Cook's The Laws of Moses and the Code of Hammurabi (1903) is a judicious, comprehensive introduction to the whole subject, and shows a full knowledge of its recent literature. Dr W. R. Harper's expected volume has not yet appeared (July 1904).

(4) Our fourth fact is the occurrence of the name Yau as a component part of several names of Syrian kings in the regal period of Israelitish history, and of Yaum, and perhaps also of Yavè, as elements of personal names in Babylonian contract-tablets of the age of Hammurabi. May we, with Professor Friedrich Delitzsch, infer from this that the Syrian kings referred to, and certain Semitic immigrants in primitive Babylonia, were worshippers of the god Yahwè, who, according to Israelitish tradition, revealed himself to Moses on Mount Sinai? Or, as I should prefer to put it, was the religion of the prophets a spiritualization of the worship of no relatively small deity, such as the god of a tribe of Kenites, but of one who was widely known and worshipped among Semitic peoples?¹ This is a far more interesting question than any which can arise respecting the origin of the Yahwè-cultus simply out of the Old Testament. And yet without a searching criticism of the Old Testament it cannot, as I think, be at all adequately answered.

(5, 6) Our fifth and sixth facts are the discovery, most probably, of the name 'Ibri (Hebrews), and certainly of the name Israel, the one in the letters from Palestine found at Tel el-Amarna in Egypt in 1887, and dating from the fifteenth century B.C., the other in the triumphal stelè of the Egyptian king Merenptah (about 1250 B.C.), found by Professor Flinders Petrie at the Egyptian Thebes in 1896. With regard to the former, scholars are no longer inclined to identify the Ḥabiri (the form under which 'Ibri is probably disguised) with the Israelites whom we know, because they fear that it would involve making the conquest of Canaan begin as early as the fifteenth century B.C. The name Ḥabiri is now generally thought to be a comprehensive one,¹ and to include in its reference all those nomad tribes which successively invaded Palestine. Among these were the Israelites of the Book of Joshua, but also, at an earlier time, the "people of Israel" whom Merenptah, in his triumphal inscription, claims to have destroyed.² That this "Israel" has a very limited reference, is clear. From the names with which it is associated, its abode would seem to have been in the S. or S.W., if not (the present

¹ Cp. Johns, Expositor, Oct. 1903, "The Name Jehovah in the Abrahamic Age."

¹ Winckler, Gesch. Israels, i. 18 ff.; Altoriental. Forschungen, 3rd series, i. 90-94.

² This has been pointed out by Spiegelberg, Der Aufenthalt Israels in Aegypten (1904), p. 33.

speaker would add) in the N. Arabian border-land of Palestine.¹

Let me quote a part of the inscription from Spiegelberg's translation, which may provisionally be accepted :—²

Seized is the Kanaan³ with every evil.

Led away is Askelon,

Taken is Gezer,⁴

Yenoam⁵ is brought to nought,

The people of Israel is laid waste,—their crops are not,

Khor⁶ has become as a widow for Egypt,

All lands together in peace.

Everyone who roamed about

Is punished by king Merenptah, gifted with life, like the sun every day.

From this passage, and from another new text

¹ Cp. Paton, Syria and Palestine (1902), p. 134 ("the region between Egypt and Canaan").

² Inserted in Six Temples of Thebes (1897), by Flinders Petrie, p. 28.

³ Pa-kanana was the name of a fortress at the extreme south of Palestine.

⁴ Perhaps a Gezer in the N. Arabian border-land. See p. 159.

⁵ Yenoam (Yenu'amu) may, as Clermont Ganneau thinks, be the Na'amah of Josh. xv. 41. It is enough, however, to know that "Naam" was a southern clan-name (cp. 1 Chr. iv. 15, Naam, a son of Caleb).

⁶ Rather Ḥaru (S.W. Palestine), connected with Ash-ḥur (p. 264).

which speaks of king Merenptah as "forcing down Gezer," it seems as if S. Palestine, and perhaps some part of the border-land, were in rebellion against the Egyptian dominion.¹ All this, of course, renders it necessary to modify the traditional criticism considerably, or at any rate opens the door for new probabilities.

(7) Our seventh fact is the mass of discoveries made by Mr Macalister at Gezer—not, I incline to think, the Gezer of Merenptah's stelè, just referred to (see p. 158, Note iv.). It is the place still known as Tell Jezer, a little to the S. of Ramleh, where M. Clermont Ganneau found an inscription with the Hebrew word "Gezer." In particular, the imposing megalithic structure, which seems to be a bamah or "high place," is a fascinating discovery. The scarabs which have been found in abundance both in earlier and in later strata indicate a long-continued Egyptian influence. This indeed is only what we might expect; it accords entirely with our previous knowledge of facts. But when Mr Macalister maintains¹ that these Egyptian objects confirm the statement of the received Hebrew text of 1 Kings ix. 16 that "Pharaoh king of Egypt went up, and took Gezer, and burned it, and gave it to his daughter, Solomon's wife," he treads upon insecure ground. That the place referred to in Kings is Mr Macalister's Gezer, and that Solomon's father-in-law was king of Egypt, are both statements which seem to be highly disputable. Indeed, Mr Macalister's own scarabs testify against him. For why should the Pharaoh have made a raid upon the territory where (as we are assured) Egyptian influence had for a long time been dominant? I need not say that this is not meant in any way as a disparagement of this explorer.

¹ See Enc. Biblica, "Egypt," § 60, note 3 (W. M. Müller).

(8) All these seven facts both invite and require further discussion. It would be easy to add to their number, but I shall only add one more of the first importance. It is the existence of passages in the Assyrian inscriptions in which reference is made to N. Arabian regions near the southern border of Palestine, called respectively Mušri and Kûs.¹ This opens up a new line of inquiry, viz. as to whether some or even many of the passages in the Old Testament which have been supposed to refer to Misraim (Egypt) and the African Kûsh (Ethiopia), do not really refer to Mušri and Kûs. To me it appears that Winckler, to whom the explanation of these passages is due, has made a discovery of the utmost value for criticism. British scholars have as yet, I am sorry to say, been somewhat shy of accepting or even investigating this, nor have even German critics shown themselves half as willing to examine into things as one could have wished. Never surely was caution more misapplied, and never were the evil consequences of deficiency of resource and undue suspicion of Assyriology more apparent. I do not hesitate to say that Winckler's discovery and his attempt to utilize it for the Old Testament imposes a special duty on the commentator—the pleasing duty of expressing gratitude to him for a flood of light on many Old Testament passages.

¹ Palestine Exploration Fund Quarterly Statement, Jan. 1903, p. 11.

¹ See especially "North Arabia and the Bible" (a defence called forth by some controversial pages in Dr Budge's History of Egypt), by Hugo Winckler, Hibbert Journal, April 1904; and cp. Cheyne, "Pressing Needs of the Old Testament Study," in the same Journal, July 1903; and "Babylon and the Bible," Oct. 1903; also Cheyne, Enc. Biblica, "Mizraim," and Critica Biblica (1903-1904). I am under great obligations to Winckler, but have not found it necessary to commit myself to the guidance of Hommel, from whose Ancient Hebrew Tradition I only gathered the fact of Hommel's substantial agreement with Winckler as to Mušri. Hommel's later Biblical investigations ("Vier neue Arabische Landschaftsnamen," in his Aufsätze und Abhandlungen, vol. ii., 1900) crossed my own. The views of both scholars were controverted by König (Fünf neue Arabische Landschaftsnamen im A.T., 1902). For Winckler's views see also his Mušri, Meluhha, Main in Mitteilungen der Vorderasiat. Gesellschaft (1898), and Geschichte Israels, vol. ii. (1900).

The limits of these regions do not concern us to-day, nor would it as yet be possible from the evidence at our command to state them precisely. According to one authority the ethnic name for the people of Muşri, at any rate in the time of Esar-haddon and later, was Midian;¹ the region itself, it is said, adjoined the land of the king of Meluhha on the south, and on the north extended to the border of South Palestine.² This seems to me, having regard to the Old Testament evidence, to need modification; but the main point for the student is to assimilate the fact that in the N. Arabian border-land were regions called Muşri and Kûsh, and in reading the Old Testament to bear this fact in mind. The territories referred to were, it appears, under vassal-kings, who paid homage to a far more powerful monarch much more distant from Palestine. One caution must here be given. It would be a fatal mistake to picture to ourselves the region called Muşri or, in Hebrew, Mişşor or Mişrim, as under the same physical conditions in primitive times which the same region (probably) displays to-day. We can hardly venture to doubt that it was, on the whole, more fertile and productive, and that its civilization gave a very tolerable reflexion of the advanced culture both of the flourishing states of S. Arabia and (partly through S. Arabia, partly perhaps through regions nearer to the Euphrates) of Babylonia. I trust no one will be so unfair as to blame me for the inevitable lacunæ in my information. The Hebrew texts compel us to assume much that is only imperfectly confirmed from other sources. But as soon as the S. Arabian inscriptions, collected by Glaser, have been thoroughly examined, we may reasonably hope that much fresh light will be shed on ancient Arabian culture, and that this will promote the better comprehension of the Old Testament.

¹ Winckler (K.A.T., 3rd ed., p. 143). Hommel makes Moşar (Muşri) and Midian synonymous (Vier neue Landsch.-namen, p. 277).

² Ibid., pp. 141 ff.

Some knowledge of the names of the regions of the S. border-land, and of their former close connexion with Israel, seems to have been possessed by scribes and editors at a comparatively late period, but afterwards, as a consequence of still further changes and catastrophes, such knowledge evidently disappeared. Partly through corruption, partly through editorial manipulation, the archaic N. Arabian names became transformed into names belonging to a different geographical area, or, as in some cases, were wrongly vocalized, or at any rate placed in vicinity to names which had become transformed, so that a correct view of the original sense was precluded. And yet it is often possible, sometimes with probability, sometimes with practical certainty, to restore the original names, if we will but give up that prejudice in favour of the uncriticized or superficially criticized Massoretic text, and of the uncriticized or but half-criticized Hebrew text, apparently used by the Septuagint translators, and proceed to apply a methodical criticism to that text (or those texts). I am afraid that, until this course shall have been adopted, the task of a commentator will continue to be rather an unremunerative one. He may indeed limit himself to discovering the sense put upon the ill-transmitted Hebrew text by the latest editor (a task not as yet consciously attempted), but he will hardly come very near the sense intended by the original writer. Such at least is my own conclusion, after no hasty examination of the subject. In case, however, this should be too bold for the ordinary student or critic, I will now propose a practicable compromise.

Let me begin by mentioning some of the passages in which the least amount of textual criticism seems to yield highly important results.¹ In fact, all that is required in these cases is to assume that Mišrain (Egypt) or Şor (Tyre) has been misread for Mišrim or Mişşor (names of N. Arabian regions), or Mişri should be interpreted as "a man of Mişşor" (i.e. a N. Arabian), rather than "a man of Egypt," "an Egyptian." To these I will add some passages in which the land of Kûsh has been supposed to be the well-known African Kûsh (or Ethiopia), whereas really it is the Arabian Kûsh adjoining Mişsor or Mişrim, which the Biblical writer meant. I plead with students for the general acceptance of at least these results, or most of them, as absolutely necessary, if the critical study of the text and of its meaning is to make progress. I have not attempted to be exhaustive in my list of Mişrim-passages; elsewhere in this volume (see the Notes) some fresh ones will be found. If anyone is convinced that I am mistaken, I shall be most grateful to him for a really thorough refutation which takes in and accounts for all the critical and exegetical facts much more adequately.

¹ These agree for the most part with Winckler's list of passages in Mušri, ii., 1898 (cp. K.A.T., 3rd ed., pp. 144-148). They are independent of Hommel's results as given in Aufsätze und Abhandlungen, pp. 304 ff.

(a) In Gen. xvi. 1 we read that Abram's wife Sarai had a Mişrite hand-maid whose name was Hagar. The lexicons and commentaries tell us that "Mişrite" here means "Egyptian," and yet with singular inconsistency they derive "Hagar," not from any Egyptian word, but from the Arabic. Some of them too very honestly mention that the ethnic name "Hagrim" (in our Bible "Hagarenes" and "Hagarites") reminds us of "Hagar." The case is exactly parallel to that of 1 Chr. ii. 34, where we are told of a certain Jerahmeelite that he had a Mişrite slave called Jarḥa (Yarḥa). It is plain that Jarḥa is a corruption of Jeraḥmeel (Yeraḥmeel), and yet the commentaries go on saying that the slave referred to was an Egyptian. So far as I can see, it is quite certain that both Hagar and Jarḥa were, according to the narrators, N. Arabians. Of course, too, in Gen. xxi. 21 the narrator meant to say that Hagar fetched Ishmael a wife "out of the land of Mişrim" (not Mişrain). There is no evidence whatever that Ishmaelites were ever regarded as partly of Egyptian origin.

But, it will be asked, did not Abram go down into Egypt, and there receive from the Pharaoh a gift of men-servants and handmaids? Is not this fact subversive of the theory? This requires us to consider (b) Gen.

xii. 10-20 so far as is necessary to refute the objection. My reply is that there is nothing in the narrative as it stands which can with any positiveness be called distinctively Egyptian colouring. "Pharaoh" may have been produced out of Pir'u (attested as a Misrite name). Between "may" and "must" there is doubtless a difference, but we have a right to prefer the alternative which enables us to account for the mention of camels, which could not be Egyptian at all, unless brought by traders from elsewhere—a sufficiently violent supposition. And to this I add that in the two parallel versions of the same popular story (chap. xx. and xxvi. 6-11) the scene is certainly laid in the S. of Palestine, and that in xx. 4, 6 (cp. 1 Sam. xxx. 15) the offending king is a worshipper of Adonai or Elohim. The original writer therefore cannot have meant to tell us that Abram "went down into Egypt." This must suffice to-day on this interesting subject; more perhaps may be said on another occasion.

(c) Turn, next, to 1 Sam. xxx. 13. There are few things more impossible than the sentence, "I am a young man of Egypt, slave of an Amalekite." Observe that the language causes this person no difficulty, that he is well acquainted with the country, and is a worshipper of Elohim (v. 15; cp. Gen. xx. 6). Obviously the young man was a Miṣrite of N. Arabia. It can be shown to be highly probable that the N. Arabians here referred to had a religion akin in externals to the popular religion of their Israelitish neighbours.

(d) The story of Benaiah (2 Sam. xxiii. 20 f.) has puzzled all the critics, simply because they had not the right key to the difficulties. Not to mention more than one of these difficulties, surely the improbability of the sudden jump from Moab to Egypt is not easily to be explained away. "He slew the two (sons of) Ariel of Moab, . . . and he slew an Egyptian, a goodly man," as the Revised Version gives it, is a most improbable sentence—more so even than that just mentioned in 1 Sam. xxx. 13. If the first part is corrupt (which few, I think, will deny), surely we may well suspect something wrong in the second. Apart from prejudice, must it not be plain that "a Mişrite" here means, not "an Egyptian," but "a N. Arabian," and this could easily be proved, if I had time to refer to parallels elsewhere for the absolutely certain correction of "a goodly man," or rather "a man of countenance, or sight" (Authorized Version, margin). Do you ask what this necessary correction is? It is "îsh jeraḥmeel" instead of "îsh mar'eh." Thus we get, "And he slew a Mişrite, a man of Jerahmeel."¹

(e) That Solomon married the daughter of an Egyptian king (1 K. iii. 1, vii. 8, ix. 16, xi. 1), is to say the least improbable. Mişrim, not Mişraim, is the country with which Solomon was most naturally connected.² To this an acute and learned scholar has added that in the Tel el-Amarna letters it is expressly said,

¹ See Critica Biblica on the passage.

² Cheyne, Jewish Quarterly Review, July 1899, pp. 559 f.; Enc. Biblica, "Solomon," § 5a. König does not refute this.

“Never has a daughter of the king of Egypt been given as a wife to anyone” (i.e. to a foreign prince), and that in this case such a matrimonial alliance was specially improbable, Solomon being a vassal king.¹ This view, however, needs to be supported by a keener criticism of the early narratives in Kings than the able scholar referred to has given.² “Pharaoh,” it should be added, need not be due to an interpolation; Pir’u is the name of a king of Muṣri in the time of Sargon, and a late editor, under a complete misapprehension as to the early history, may have read the letter Hé instead of Waw.

(f) In 1 Kings iv. 30 (v. 10) the wisdom of Solomon is compared (so it is generally held) to “the wisdom of all the children of the east

¹ Winckler, Geschichte Israels, ii. 263, cp. p. 262, and W. M. Müller, Asien und Europa, p. 390.

² A contribution to such a criticism was given in Critica Biblica, part iv., which, however scanty and concise, yet may be said to contain some of the most essential things, which will unfortunately be sought for in vain even in Prof. Stade’s work on 1 and 2 Kings in Prof. Paul Haupt’s critical edition of the Hebrew Bible.

country and all the wisdom of Egypt." Now it is true that Egypt had its proverbial literature (including e.g. the sayings of Ptah-hotep), but why should the narrator go so far out of his way, when of all Israel's neighbours Edom had the highest reputation for wisdom (cp. Obad. 8, Jer. xlix. 7, Baruch iii. 22 f., and the Book of Job), and when "it is precisely from Egypt that (Israel) appears to have received the least intellectual stimulus"?¹ Moreover, v. 31, according to critical principles, is an explanatory gloss on v. 30, and in v. 31 there is no word which can be tortured into a resemblance to Mišraim, or to the name of any tribe or population of Mišraim. On the other hand, the land of Mišrim (Mušri), alike from its political importance and its geographical situation, may without difficulty be supposed to have been a centre of S. Semitic sages. It would be easy to pursue this subject further, did time permit.

(g) 1 Kings x. 28 f. Horses from Egypt?
 "Is it in the least probable that they ever had an export-trade in horses, when we consider the lack of extensive pastures in Egypt?"¹ It is true that in the Amarna tablets Egyptian feudatories in Palestine request chariots and horses of the Egyptian king. But no one doubts that the Egyptian kings had horses for their own use, and, under special pressure, could furnish them to their feudatories, and in the same tablets we find other princes offering to supply them to the king. Recent critics, following Winckler, have supposed that it is a N. Syrian and Cilician land called (as if to plague the critics) Muşri, and famous in antiquity for its horses, that is meant in 1 Kings x. 28 f. But to this view there are several objections, notably the fact that, unless 2 Kings vii. 6 be an exception, there is according to the new theory no further reference to a N. Syrian Mişrim, but abundant reference to a N. Arabian. But 2 Kings vii. 6 is not an exception. We are therefore driven back on the supposition that the country meant is the N. Arabian Muşri. It is true, we have been accustomed to think that the Arabian horse was not known outside Arabia before the Christian era. But if on other grounds there are passages of the Old Testament which refer to the Arabian horse, must we not reconsider our opinion? Provisionally this is all that need be said. There is at any rate no escape from the admission that 1 Kings x. 28 f. records Solomon's importation of horses from the N. Arabian land of Muşri.

¹ Toy, Enc. Biblica, "Wisdom Literature," § 2.

¹ Enc. Biblica, "Mizraim," § 2a.

(h) It is stated in the ordinary text of 1 Kings xi. 18 and 40 that Hadad and Jeroboam both sought refuge in Mişraim (Egypt). It is much more natural, however, to suppose that they fled to Mişrim (Muşri).¹ The king of Muşri, who had given Solomon a wife, was naturally disposed, out of selfish motives, to play off Hadad and Jeroboam against his ambitious son-in-law.

(i) With regard to 2 Kings vii. 6, the nearest allies the Israelites were likely to obtain were the so-called Hittites and the N. Arabian Mişrites. An old connexion existed between the Israelites and both these populations. David had a "Hittite" among his chief warriors (2 Sam. xi. 3, xxiii. 39), and Solomon was alternately on good terms and on bad with the king of the N. Arabian Mişrites. The "Hittites" referred to were most probably the neighbours of the N. Arabian Mişrites. The other view, viz. that the Hittites and Mişrites were from N. Syria, is less probable, (1) because these northern peoples cannot be shown to be elsewhere referred to, and (2) because of the expression "the king of Israel has hired against us." The Arabians were born mercenaries.

¹ Cheyne, Jewish Quarterly Review, July 1899, pp. 551-568. Winckler, Geschichte Israels, ii., 1900, pp. 269-273, agrees independently on the main point.

(k) The alliance referred to in Isa. xxx. 2, xxxi. 1, was probably not with Egypt, but with Muşri. Even if "Hanes" in v. 4 can be plausibly identified,¹ we must still ask why this place (whether this or that Egyptian city be meant) should be mentioned at all. At the very least, vv. 6 and 7 must refer to a journey to Muşri,¹ but there seems to be no sufficient reason for stopping short here. Sargon speaks of Pir'u, king of Muşri, in the very same terms which are used v. 7*b* by the prophetic writer.

¹ See, however, Enc. Biblica, "Hanes."

(l) Amos i. 9, as the text stands, contains a threat against Tyre. But "Tyre" between Ashdod and Edom cannot be right. The theory of interpolation would be inadequate. Clearly this is one of the cases in which Şör (Tyre) has been miswritten for Mişşor (Muşri). It would seem, then, that the Mişrite as well as the Edomite people was regarded as a "brother" of Israel.

(m, n) Joel iii. 9 and Ps. lx. 9 must be taken together. In the former passage "Egypt" and "Edom" are grouped together, without any apparent reason. In the latter the "strong city" and "Edom" do not produce a parallelism. The remedy is easy. "Egypt" should of course be Miṣrim, and "the strong city" should be "unto Miṣsor." Thus the lands of Muṣri and of Edom are parallel, just as they are parallel in the misunderstood passage, Am. i. 9.

¹ First worked out by Cheyne, Isaiah, in Paul Haupt's edition of the Hebrew Bible, p. 102, on the basis of Winckler. See K.A.T., 3rd ed., pp. 172 f., and cp. Marti ad loc.

(o) On the passages in which "Shihor" and "Miṣraim" (Egypt) are combined, see NOTE xv., pp. 268 f.

I have to refer next to a few passages in which the N. Arabian Kûsh, which has been found by Winckler in the cuneiform inscriptions, is almost beyond reasonable doubt referred to. Here too, if I am wrong, I hope that some one will do me the favour to refute me, showing how the various facts can be more adequately accounted for.

(a) Gen. ii. 13. The mention of Havilah in v. 11 makes it extremely probable that the N. Arabian Kûsh is meant.¹ Whether the geography of the description of Paradise is quite as fantastic as a good authority has supposed,¹ seems to me very doubtful. It may be mentioned here that Hiddekel (see Enc. Bib., s.v.) is certainly not the Tigris, and that Perath (Engl. Bible, "Euphrates") is probably the short for Ephrath, which is a southern name (cp. 1 Chr. ii. 19), distorted in Num. xxii. 5 into "Pethor" (for the view here rejected see Dillmann or G. B. Gray on Numbers). This is also the true explanation of Perath in Jer. xiii. 4 ff.

¹ Winckler agrees with me, but explains Kûsh to mean S. Arabia; the same name, he remarks, as that given to Nubia, from a fantastically wrong geographical conception. But he himself tells us that "Kusi and Mèluhha" is the

(b) Gen. x. 6. Kûsh and Mişrim (not Mişrain) are both sons of Hām, i.e. Jerahmeel. We have now some guidance in explaining the sons of Kûsh and Mişrim, a subject which I must of course leave untouched at present.

(c) Num. xii. 1. Why did Moses marry usual designation of N. Arabia. The Old Testament passages seem to me to point to N. Arabia, as in the case of Muşri.

¹ Winckler, K.A.T., 3rd ed., pp. 137-144.

an "Ethiopian woman" (so Auth. Vers., after Septuagint)? Why indeed? But the Hebrew has "Kûshite"; a N. Arabian woman is meant, presumably Zippōrah.

(d) Judg. ii. 10. "Kushan - rishathaim, king of Aram-naharaim," is a highly problematical personage. "Kushan," however, gives us the key. The original tradition made him a N. Arabian. Cp. on (p), and Critica Biblica on the passage.

(e) 2 S. xviii. 21. It is important historically that David had a Kûshite among his young men, for everything tends to show that David himself sprang from the N. Arabian border-land.

(f) Isa. xx. 3. The peoples which Sargon, we are told, will bring to nought are the Mişrites and the Kûshites. Underneath the troublesome "three years" in v. 3 — no one can make the text quite clear — lies the word "Ishmaelites," a gloss on "Mişrim and Kûsh."

(g) Isa. xlii. 3 and xlv. 14. Here again it is the Mişrites and the Kûshites of N. Arabia who are meant; a miswritten gloss in the latter passage states that these and the Sabæans are men of Jerahmeel. Where one branch of Jerahmeelites lived, we know from Gen. xxv. 18, 1 S. xv. 7; "Ishmael" and "Amalek" are both synonyms of Jerahmeel.

(h) Hab. iii. 7. "Kushan," which is parallel to "Midian," is of course not "Ethiopia" (as the Septuagint), but the N. Arabian Kûsh. Cp. on (d).

(i) Ps. lxxxvii. 4, a proof-passage both for Mişsor and for Kûsh. The right reading is, "Behold Philistia and Mişsor, with Kûsh."

(k) 2 Chr. xiv. 9. Zerah was surely not an Ethiopian (a view which is very difficult to make plausible), but a N. Arabian Kûshite (see Enc. Bib., "Zerah"). The N. Arabians made periodical raids on Israelitish territory.

(l) 2 Chr. xxi. 16. "The spirit of the Philistines and of the Arabians which are beside the Ethiopians" (Revised Version) is very strange. Plainly the N. Arabian Kûshites are meant.

I make no apology for the length of this examination of passages. It would indeed be hard to exaggerate the importance of the task which I have undertaken. The light-hearted way in which commentators allude to this subject is very much to be regretted. One remark, however unwelcome, or at least troublesome, to those who investigate Hebrew names, I am bound to add, viz. that there are a number of passages in which another N. Arabian double of a well-known name occurs. I do not now refer to those in which a N. Arabian Aram is most probably referred to, because this interpretation of the passages rests at present solely on exegetical necessities and on the inherent probability derived from analogies. The name I refer to is Asshur (see NOTE xv.), in my view of which I am supported by Professor Hommel, who rests his own argument largely on the Minæan inscriptions. I may add that this name also occurs in the more original form Ashhur, as well as in various corrupted forms such as Shur and the personal name Sisera (s is duplicated, and a transposed), while Ashhur sometimes becomes Shihor, Hur, Geshur, Achish, and very possibly Kûsh. That the southern Asshur does not appear in the cuneiform inscriptions can hardly be thought strange. Kûs at any rate is found, and Kûs or Kûsh, like Achish, possibly comes from and represents Ashhur (see p. 270).

To form a decided opinion on all the details here referred to, would of course be impossible for ordinary students. But even a slight examination will show that there must be a good deal in these researches, and that it is by no means a rash opinion that the history of Israel was largely affected by Arabian as well as Babylonian influences. That the textual criticism of the Old Testament is passing into a new phase, must be obvious, however troublesome this may be. On some of the details it may be long before even a fairly good critic can see his way, for mighty is the power of prejudice, and the tendency to minimize unwelcome facts is universal. Still it is not a rash opinion that by utilizing Winckler's discovery scholars who are not afraid to dig down into the two recensions of the Hebrew text¹ may be enabled to restore much of the original text sufficiently for historical purposes. In two recent articles in the *Hibbert Journal*² I have endeavoured to show where I myself stand, and to explain my principles to the larger public. I have also in the Encyclopædia Biblica, and in its sequel, Critica Biblica, and lastly in my new Book of Psalms (1904), shown how these principles work out in practice. If life and health are granted me, I will not only go on correcting my own faults—for who can escape faults?—but also treat some of the new historical and exegetical questions that are arising more fully and connectedly. At present I must be content with having borne some part in laying the foundation for the advanced critical work of the future.

¹ The Massoretic or received Hebrew text, and the Septuagintal, i.e. the Hebrew text which lies most directly underneath the Septuagint Greek version.

² In July and October 1903.

The truth must by degrees make its way. It is a fact, which cannot be argued out of existence, that we have recently acquired two new keys to the Old Testament, by which great problems are being brought nearer to a solution. One is furnished by a critical Assyriology, soon, we may hope, to be reinforced from S. Arabia; the other, by a more methodical textual criticism. I invite you to give your interest and sympathy, not only to those who are, if I may with all respect say so, only gently progressive, but to those who are full of a keen enthusiasm for the use of those precious keys. I have shown you one of the chief sources of critical suggestion in a recent Assyriological discovery which has a close bearing on textual criticism. Pardon me if I devote some of the closing words of my Lecture to this most important subject.

The Hebrew text, as it stands, is a valuable record of what, according to the later scribes and writers, the sacred monuments of their history and religion ought to have been. To those scholars who enable us to understand better what those scribes and editors meant, we owe our gratitude. But equal thanks must surely be due to those who, combining reverence with freedom, and using new methods as well as old, endeavour to reproduce to some extent what the ancient Israelitish writers actually said.

Have I succeeded in making myself fully understood? The strength of educational prejudices may, with some, have hindered this. I will therefore try to explain myself more plainly. There are, as I venture to think, two great works for Old Testament scholars to do in the text. One is to find out, with the help of the versions, what meaning or meanings the last editors of the Old Testament put upon the text, when that text had already suffered greatly from corruption. The other is to approximate as closely as possible to the true text and to its meaning by looking underneath the received Hebrew text and that presupposed by the Septuagint. These two works ought to be kept quite distinct. To attempt to explain the traditional text on the theory that it is not very seriously corrupt, and that by the comparison of Arabic and Assyrian words, or by grammatical subtleties, the meaning of the original writers can be extracted from it, does not appear to be the most critical course. And the same judgment must be passed on those scholars who, though aware to some extent of the serious corruption of the text, seek to correct it without taking any account of Winckler's discovery of Muşri and Kûs in the inscriptions, and of the most obvious of the corrections of the Hebrew text which have resulted from this.

At the same time let me once more cordially admit that much fine work has been done by my old comrades from their own point of view. It is highly desirable to have the tradition put before us with as impressive an array of arguments in its favour as possible. If I may quote words which were deliberately chosen, and which at present I am unable to modify, "well does it (i.e. the tradition) deserve the patient and thoughtful study which a succession of modern scholars have given to it, though one may fear that this patient scholarship has sometimes been unconsciously devoted to propping up unsound conclusions."¹

But will not this new critical doctrine weaken the moral authority of the Old Testament Scriptures? The question implies an inadequate comprehension of the doctrine. For the essence of my teaching is that we have two Old Testaments, one only accessible in a fragmentary form, the other complete; the one precious to the historian, the other of the utmost value for us all, because it is the authorized expression of the ancient Jewish Church. My views tend to increased conservatism in the rendering of the text of the Jewish Old Testament. As a student I value this text very highly as a record of the attitude of Judaism towards its own past, and as a Christian Churchman too I continue to value highly the traditional form of the Jewish Scriptures. But as a historian of ancient Israel I need something else, and I also think that when the present turmoil has been stilled, those who now speak evil of me, and of all who seek to reconstruct history on a large scale, will become eager to have a share in the fuller development of the new system.

¹ The Book of Psalms (1904), by the present writer, Introduction, p. x. The conclusions referred to above are often unsound simply because the tradition is often pure guesswork.

My fellow-Churchmen! I am well aware that your heart is chiefly in the New Testament, but thorough students of the New Testament cannot afford to neglect the Old, or, I would rather say, those who would dig deep into early Christian antiquity must not ignore either the pre-Christian Jewish religion or the pre-Jewish religion and history of Israel. There is no sharp line of distinction between Jewish and Christian; the Christian religion is a synthesis, and only those who have dim eyes can assert that the intellectual empires of Babylon and Persia have fallen. Babylon in particular has left its mark both on many parts of the Old and on some parts of the New Testament. And yet, the more we recognize the syncretism both of Judaism and of Christianity, the more, if we have any feeling for religion, shall we be conscious of a something which is peculiar to them, and it is for those critics, who like all true Churchmen have a deep sense of religion, but who super-add to this trained historical insight, to make the Church at large understand wherein this peculiarity consists.

NOTES

NOTE I., to p. 71.

THE discouragement given by Prof. Harnack to the study of myths, with a view to illustrate the statement of Christ's Virgin-birth, is to be regretted. But in the interesting note in his History of Dogma, already referred to, there is one remark which appears very suggestive, and which is certainly based on a sound intuition. It is that the earliest development of Christian doctrine "is free from heathen myths so far as these had not already been received by wide circles of Jews, . . . which in the case of the idea of the Virgin-birth is not demonstrable." Certainly the "idea" of the Virgin-birth, held, as it appears, by some Jewish Christians, could not be of non-Jewish mythic origin, unless it had first of all been accepted in Jewish circles. But, as Prof. Gunkel has pointed out, Jewish syncretism began early, and the same scholar sees very clearly that the "idea" must have found acceptance among the Jews, and (to use his own words) have "belonged to the Christological dogma" before the birth of Jesus. Unfortunately he cannot venture to point to any actually extant Jewish story as the original of the Jewish-Christian statement. To me, I confess, this attitude of resignation seems unnecessary, and, as it happens, the Jewish story, which I have myself ventured to single out as probably the required original, has been very ably treated by Prof. Gunkel in another but not remotely separated connexion. That on the most important point we are completely agreed, has already been mentioned. Prof. Harnack's final assertion that "it is in point of method not permissible to stray so far" (as the comparative mythologists seem to him to have done), "when we have near at hand such a complete explanation as Isaiah vii. 14." would be controverted by Prof. Gunkel as earnestly as it is by me. On this matter, scholars need, I think, to be brought, by persuasive pleading, into a larger measure of agreement. Let me add a few words upon it.

It has been too much overlooked that the mistranslation of hā-'almah in the Septuagint of Isaiah vii. 14 is so far from accounting for the belief in the Virgin-birth of Christ that it requires to be explained itself. There is no reason whatever to suppose that the Septuagint translator decided upon the rendering ἡ παρθένος from philological considerations. Jerome may have traced 'almah to the root 'alam, "to hide" (significat virginem absconditam), but it is not probable that there was any such tradition among the Septuagint translators, who in four passages render 'almah by παρθένος (as Aq., Symm., and Theod. in Isaiah vii. 14). In Gen. xxiv. 48, the ἡ παρθένος of the Septuagint (for hā-'almah) is simply a loose rendering which does not affect the sense, and might quite as well have been given in Ex. ii. 8. But in Isa. vii. 14 the translator must have had some special motive, and that motive must have been not philological, but, if I may say so, ideological. Baldensperger (Die messianisch-apokalyptischen Hoffnungen, 1903, p. 200) thinks that Jewish writers may already have begun to reflect upon the religious value of virginity and sexual abstinence. This is not satisfactory; a more concrete explanation is wanting. Nor need we look far for it, if we do not on principle reject the help of comparative mythology. (See p. 82.)

As for the quotation in Matt. i. 22 f., it is perfectly well accounted for as one of the subsidiary Biblical proofs which were habitually sought for by the evangelists. The real supports of their statements were traditions of one kind or another, but their belief in the written word of prophecy led them to look for a justification of these traditions in the prophetic scriptures, and with this amount of justice, that sometimes the traditions and the prophecies had a common origin.

Another scholar (Dr A. Wright) deserves credit for denying that the statement in Matt. i. 18 has arisen out of a mistranslation. "We cannot allow," he says, "that this error gave rise to the doctrine." He thinks that "in other cases where quotations from the Old Testament are introduced, . . . the quotation is later than the context" (Synopsis, Introd., p. xli.). It is at any rate probable that there were current collections of passages from the prophets which were interpreted Messianically, and were used by the evangelists.

NOTE II., to p. 77.

A. Babylonian affinities of the story in Rev. xii.—I hold with Prof. Gunkel that the story referred to has arisen out of an ancient mythologic tradition of a World-Redeemer which had become "international," but was ultimately of Babylonian origin.

Let me illustrate and explain this statement. Prof. Fritz Hommel, in 1890, declared that the dragon in Rev. xii. must be the dragon Tiâmat, and Prof. Hermann Gunkel, in 1895 (in his fine work, Die Schöpfung und Chaos), pointed out a number of features in that strange narrative which appeared to him to suggest that it arose out of a Babylonian myth.¹ He could not indeed find exactly such a myth in the Babylonian records as yet brought to light, but that, considering our limited knowledge, cannot be said to be an important objection. That the seven-headed dragon (Rev. xii. 3), also called "the ancient serpent" (ὁ ὄφις ὁ ἀρχαῖος, v. 9, xx. 2), is no other than Tiâmat, whom the god of the springtide sun — Marduk — encountered and overcame, and with whom Prof. Friedrich Delitzsch² long ago identified the "seven-headed serpent" of the primitive Babylonians, he had no difficulty in showing. That Tiâmat is imagined as a monster of the watery abyss is in accordance with what we read in vv. 15 and 16. She is also said to have had a portion of the newly-produced gods on her side; so in v. 7 we hear of "the dragon and his angels." Prof. Gunkel has also pointed out striking points of contact between Rev. xii. and Dan. vii., and argues that since the former passage cannot possibly be viewed as an imitation of the latter,¹ and since Dan. vii. has been proved (by himself) to have strong Babylonian affinities, we cannot do otherwise than assume a Babylonian origin for Rev. xii.

¹ Schöpfung, pp. 379–398.

² Wo lag das Paradies, 1881, p. 148.

Prof. Gunkel's theory has found an assailant in Bousset, who, besides objecting to two points of detail, thinks the Babylonian origin rather assumed than proved.² That is true; but the ultimate Babylonian origin remains probable, only we must put it far back in primitive times. That an old sun-myth has been worked up in Rev. xii. is not denied; on the contrary, Bousset (who is followed by Porter, in Hastings, Dict. Bible, "Revelation") also energetically affirms this. Gunkel on his side now definitely asserts that the mythic material of Rev. xii. must have become "international" in a primitive period.¹ This is no doubt a necessary concession, and may now be regarded as practically certain.

¹ Gunkel also compares Rev. xii. 4*a* (the dragon's tail drawing the third part of the stars, and casting them to the earth) with Dan. viii. 10 (the little horn casting down some of the stars to the ground).

² Die Offenbarung Johannis, pp. 408-410.

B. Has the story Egyptian affinities?—Bousset (Offenb., pp. 410 f.) shows that it has. "The woman, the mother of the child, becomes the great Mother of the gods—Hathor (or, as she is also represented, Isis);² the child is the young sun-god Horus; the dragon is Typhon.³ [Hathor is represented in Egyptian monuments with a sun on her head; Horus is called the beautiful boy; his birthday is celebrated at the opening of spring. The most favourite symbols for Typhon (Set) are the dragon, the serpent, and the crocodile. In the Gnostic Pistis Sophia the dragon who pursues Sophia has seven heads.] After Osiris has been killed by Set, the woman, who is pursued by Typhon, collects his bones, and in a wonderful way bears her child, the young sun-god. Then she escapes on a skiff of papyrus, passes through the marshes, and places herself in safety on the legendary floating island of Chemmis. According to another variant, she bears the young sun-god Horus there." Brugsch, from whose Religion und Mythologie der Aegypter Bousset draws these details, gives a hymn to Osiris which contains the statement, "She makes air with her plumage, and produces wind with her wings," which reminds us of the wings of the great eagle (Rev. xii. 14); the sacred bird of Hathor-Nechbit was the vulture. The same hymn mentions the victory of Horus over the dragon (see NOTE III., p. 212). Bousset, then, appears to me to have done well to cite the myth of Hathor and Horus. A primitive contact between the early Egyptian race and the Babylonians has been made extremely probable by Hommel. Winckler, too, remarks with justice that the cultus of the Horus-child belongs to the same religion as the Babylonian, and is in this sense Semitic (Arabisch-Semitisch-Orientalisch, 1901, p. 127, note 2).

¹ Zum religiösen Verständniss des N.T., 1903, p. 55.

² The characteristic point in the Isis myth is that this goddess is the mother of Horus; whether or not she was represented as the consort of Osiris, was indifferent (Roscher, Lex. der Mythologie, ii. 1, col. 364).

³ Gunkel (Verständniss, p. 57, note 1) remarks that in Egyptian mythology Typhon is described as red (Plutarch, De Iside et Osiride, 22, 30; Eus., Præp. Ev., iii. 3).

c. Has it Persian (Zoroastrian) affinities?—Recent scholars have come to the conclusion that there were close relations in early times between the Iranian and the Babylonian religions; for this see Oldenberg, in the Zeitschrift of the German Oriental Society, 1893, pp. 46–48. This seems to give increased importance to the traces of a Persian story parallel to that which we have to postulate for early Babylonia. There is in fact a Zoroastrian legend of the Virgin-birth of the Saviour, and in the legend referred to the Virgin appears to have arisen out of a star-goddess; the mythic dragon, however, plays no part in the story. The Saviour is the famous Saoshyant (so the name is given in the Avesta), i.e. the Beneficent One, who is to conquer the demons, raise the dead, and ultimately renew the world. This last great act is the close of the protracted world-drama, and may remind us of the Biblical references to new heavens and a new earth (see Encyclopædia Biblica, "Zoroastrianism," § 28)—the technical name, often referred to, is frashō-kereti. This Saoshyant is represented in a late but important collection of expanded early Zoroastrian traditions, called the Bundahish, as born of a Virgin in a supernatural way to the heroic semi-mythical prophet Zoroaster (Zarathustra, Zaratust). The son of Zoroaster had been wonderfully preserved by an angel, who in due time was to "blend it with a mother" (Bund., xxxii. 8 f.). This was the last of the posthumous sons assigned to Zoroaster, or, as one may say, the last of the Messiahs; for more about him see West's translations from the Zoroastrian Scriptures in the Sacred Books of the East, vols. v. and xxiv.¹ Here it is only necessary to mention the grounds of the preceding statement respecting the legend of Saoshyant's virgin-birth. His destined birthplace is said to have borne the significant name "Mountain of the Lord." Can one doubt as to the original meaning of this? Have we not here the counterpart of the mountain of the divine beings, so familiar to us in the Babylonian mythology? In a later tradition, which strikes one as genuinely Iranian, a star is spoken of which descends on the sacred mountain, and contains within itself the form either of a little boy with the appearance of a cross over him, or of a virgin.² In either case,

S. T. M. v. 252.

¹ Not only are there scattered notices of Saoshyant and his work in the Avesta, but two passages of the 19th Yasht give more detailed statements. Thus the Bundahish is justified. See Hübschmann, Jahrbücher für Protestantische Theologie, 1879, p. 235.

² Böklen, Die Verwandtschaft, etc., pp. 97, 100.

the descent of this star from heaven to the earth-mountain (or mountain of the gods) indicates the supernatural birth of the Child-Saviour, and the tradition which connects the star with a virgin is parallel to the description of the woman in heavenly attire in Rev. xii. 1, while the reference to the virgin in the star suggests that the mother of the child was the deity called by the Babylonians Istar, who was very probably¹ connected in early times with the zodiacal sign Spica (= Virgo). In this connexion it is natural to refer to the beautiful story of the Magi guided to Bethlehem by a star (Matt. ii. 1-12). The star of the Magi was in fact probably suggested by the star which symbolized the Saviour's mother (cp. Rev. xii. 1). See one of the eschatological prophecies ascribed to Zoroaster, quoted by Böklen, Die Verwandtschaft der jüdisch-christlichen mit der Parsischen Eschatologie, 1902, p. 100.

D. Are there Greek affinities?—It has been suggested by Dr Rendel Harris (Homeric Centones) that vv. 1 and 2 reveal the influence of Homer.¹ One would at any rate hardly expect to find this, and more attention is due to a theory of Prof. A. Dieterich (Abrahas, 1891, pp. 117 ff.), called "not improbable" by Prof. A. Jülicher in Enc. Biblica, col. 2011, and adopted by Prof. Otto Pfeleiderer (Das Christusbild des urchristlichen Glaubens, 1908, pp. 38 ff.). The opinion of this scholar is that the story of the dragon pursuing the child in Rev. xii. 3-5 is a recast of the Greek myth (transmitted by Hyginus) of the great dragon Pytho pursuing the pregnant Leto to destroy her, because of a prophecy that the son of Leto would slay him. The wind-god Boreas, we are told, carried Leto to Poseidon, who brought her to Ortygia, and covered the island with the waves of the sea. Not finding Leto, Pytho returned to Parnassus, and Leto's child Apollo was born in perfect safety on the island, which was raised out of the sea by Poseidon. On the fourth day after his birth, Apollo, the destined avenger, slew the dragon.

¹ See Zimmern, K.A.T., 3rd ed., p. 427.

¹ *Ἐνθ' ἐφάνη μέγα σῆμα· δράκων ἐπὶ νῶτα δαφεινος,
Σμερδαλέος (Iliad, ii. 308 f.)

Evidently this myth stands in some historical connexion with the description in Rev. xii. ; the reference to the prophecy of the fate of Pytho throws much-needed light on the statement in v. 4 of the dragon's animosity towards the "woman." It was plausible, therefore, to conjecture that the myth of Leto was known in the circles to which the author of the Johanne Apocalypse belonged. In fact, there are coins from Asia Minor which bear representations of the flying Leto, and if, as Dieterich holds, the author was a Hellenistic Christian of Ephesus, he would naturally hear more talk of Leto and her son than of the serpent.

Still it is not at all certain that Dieterich's view of the authorship of the Apocalypse is correct. This is most probably a composite work, and to assume that Rev. xii. and whatever hangs together with it is of Hellenistic Ephesian origin, would be extremely hazardous. To trace it directly to a Greek myth, is inconsistent with sound method. It may well be, however, that the Greek myth of Leto is a recast of an Oriental myth, ultimately derived from Babylonia. Robertson Smith suspected that the name Leto came from that of the Arabian goddess Al-Lat (see p. 74, note 2). One would rather, perhaps, connect it with the name of the Babylonian Allatu, who, though best known as queen of the underworld, seems to have been originally a consort of Bel, the god worshipped at Nippur (see Jastrow, Relig. of Bab. and Ass., pp. 104, 587).

To sum up. The affinities between the story of the Messiah's birth in Rev. xii. 1 and various non-Jewish myths prove that a mythic tradition of the birth of a Redeemer had become international. Its origin is Babylonian. See further Gunkel, Schöpfung, pp. 283 ff.; Bousset, Die Offenbarung Johannis, pp. 406 ff.; Enc. Biblica, "Apocalypse," § 41. For a popularization of the view that the conception of a divine or miraculous birth of Christ is of Greek origin, see Slade Butler, "The Virgin-Birth," Nineteenth Century and After, July 1904, p. 87.

NOTE III., to p. 78, note 1.

It was very natural for earlier critics to explain what is said of the dragon in various strange apocalyptic descriptions from Zoroastrian sources. It was equally natural for Gunkel, who opened a new line of interpretation for the Apocalypse, to turn the attention of scholars to the dragon-myth of that great teacher of the nations—Babylonia. The truth, however, which is now coming out, is that Babylonian, Egyptian, and Iranian or Persian myths (all of which have to be registered and compared with the statements in the Apocalypse) are all akin, and profoundly affected the world within the sphere of their influence. I have myself long ago traced both the Babylonian and the Egyptian dragon-myth in the Old Testament, but not until lately in the Apocalypse. Here I confess myself to have been too long dazzled by the overpoweringly strong evidence of Zoroastrian influence in the very peculiar statements of Rev. xx. 1-7, 10, 14 f.

Students of to-day have an easier task, though doubtless, until the more prominent teachers of the Bible become converted to modern views, it will still require some strength of mind to resist the temptations to a misplaced "sobriety" and "caution." Caution, of course, is always needful in certain obscure points, but the right of these researches, and some at least of the results, are established. It is well, however, that those who are engaged in them should remember that there was a primæval period before the myths had obtained any consistency. It would be a mistake to suppose that any developed form of the dragon-myth known to us is, strictly speaking, primitive. On this subject Prof. Keane (in the introduction to the English translation of Bousset's Antichrist) has given some suggestions.

The strangeness of the statements in Rev. xx. 1-7, 10, and 14 f. can hardly be exaggerated. The story of Gog and Magog in vv. 8 and 9 is plainly based on Ezek. xxxviii. 2-xxxix. 16 (cp. also the Ethiopic Enoch, chap. lvi.). But there is, I think, no parallel in the later Jewish literature to the strongly mythical account of the binding of the dragon for a thousand years, and his subsequent release. It must therefore be a relatively early importation from a foreign source, and have not altogether commended itself to Jewish writers in general. Its source is either a Zoroastrian myth (not of course in a written form), or some story which has a common origin with that myth. The Zoroastrian story will be found in the Bundahish. It tells of a fight in the heavenly world (cp. Rev. xii. 7, xix. 11), between Ahura Mazda (Ormazd) and his helpers on the one hand, and Angra Mainyu (Ahriman) and his helpers on the other, ending with the final breaking of the power of evil; also of the fate of the serpent Azhi Dahâka, whom Frêdûn was unable to kill, but confined in Mount Dimâvand. "When he becomes unfettered," we are told, "Sâm arises, and smites and slays him." It also speaks of the burning of the serpent Gôkîhar in molten metal. Evidently this last tradition is closely connected with the description in Rev. xx. 10. From such a non-Jewish myth, and not from Dan. vii. 11, the writer of that passage appears to me to have drawn. It is true, the beast "terrible and strong exceedingly" (Dan. vii. 7) which at length "was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame" (v. 11), is clearly parallel to the dragon of the Apocalypse. There are, however, great difficulties in the way of assuming the dependence of the Apocalyptic writer here or anywhere on Dan. vii.,¹ and the most probable view is that the writers of both works are dependent on some form of the wide-spread Oriental dragon-myth.

¹ Cp. Gunkel, Schöpfung und Chaos, pp. 358 ff.

The statement (Rev. xx. 2) of the millennial binding of Satan,¹ or the dragon (originally two independent figures, but here virtually identical), is another Zoroastrian feature to be noticed. The restraint put upon Satan (for which cp. Test. Levi, 18, Beliar said to be bound by the Messiah) may indeed also be Babylonian, but the millennium is not to be found in any known form of the corresponding Babylonian myth. In the Bundahish, however, the duration of the world is given as 12,000 years, divided into periods of 3000 years. At the end of the last millennium Sôshyans (= Saoshyant) shall appear. Thus the millennial division is characteristically Zoroastrian. The duration of the period of Azhi Dahâka's imprisonment is given in the Bahman Yasht (iii. 55) as 9000 years.² A Zoroastrian origin for the millennium may therefore fairly be suspected (see Enc. Biblica, "Millennium," §§ 1, 2, and cp. "Zoroastrianism," § 15).

¹ The "Satan" is analogous to the Zoroastrian Drûj, the spirit of falsehood, and chief of the helpers of Ahriman; almost indeed to Ahriman himself.

² Cp. the Talmudic view that the Messianic kingdom will last 1000 (or 2000) years.

But has the Egyptian dragon- or serpent-myth no affinities to the Apocalyptic dragon- or serpent-stories? On the contrary. The defeat and final destruction of the gigantic serpent Apôpi (Apap) and his fellows, when chaos gave place to order, and darkness to light, was not final. Day by day the struggle between the serpent and the sun-god is renewed. This is one form of the Egyptian myth.¹ According to another, Horus with his sharp sword blinds the monster, and imprisons him in the underworld; afterwards the dragon is consumed by fire.²

But was there no parallel Babylonian myth in circulation? Zimmern mentions none. It is impossible, however, to believe that the myth of Marduk's struggle with Tiâmat was not at length moralized by the Babylonians themselves, and that they did not look forward to a golden age, in the "fulness of the times," when the power of evil, represented by the dragon, would be finally broken. Surely this gifted people, which certainly had the conception of periods of the world and recurrent cycles,¹ cannot have failed to develop this idea. Surely too there were many more myths than the cuneiform tablets have as yet presented to us. For the same reason, it is presumed elsewhere (see pp. 195-197) that there was a Babylonian myth of the birth of Marduk, in which the dragon had a part to play, though we cannot as yet point to it.

¹ Cheyne, Job and Solomon, p. 76; cp. Maspero, Dawn of Civilization, pp. 90 f., 159; Book of the Dead, xv., xxxix.

² See the Hymn to Osiris quoted by Bousset, Offenbarung, p. 411 (cp. p. 500, note 12).

NOTE IV., to p. 73.

The subject of this note is, first, the interpretation of "one like a son of man" (Dan. vii. 13), and next, the explanation of "Michael" (Dan. x. 13, 21, xii. 1, Rev. xii. 7). It will be seen that these two appellations must be treated in combination, and in relation to the new facts of archæology and of Jewish literature. The first passage, Dan. vii. 13 f., runs thus in the Revised Version :—

¹ See K.A.T., 3rd ed., pp. 317 ff., 332 ff. (Winckler), 383, 392 f. (Zimmern).

I saw in the night visions, and, behold, there came with the clouds of heaven one like unto a son of man, and he came even to the ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all the peoples, nations, and languages should serve him : his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.

I have ventured to say that this passage from the pattern Apocalypse gave a great impulse to the Messianic belief among the Jews, and that the form of the reference to the Messiah (for such a reference I hold that there is) shows that the Messianic idea had already a development behind it. That an impulse was given to Messianism by Dan. vii. 13 f., is too plain to need proving, and that the Messianic idea was not expressed by the Apocalyptist for the first time is shown by the absence of any special explanation of the title, “one like a son of man”; who the personage so denominated was, the circle of readers of the original Apocalypse of Daniel must have known.

It should be noted here (1) that the phrase in our Bible, “one like unto a son of man,” is unnecessarily obscure. In the recent German translation of the Old Testament intended for general use and edited by Prof. Kautzsch the rendering is “one who resembled a man,” and this is certainly the meaning. (2) That according to many scholars the personage referred to is not the Messiah, in spite of the fact that this interpretation is already sanctioned by chap. xlvi. of the Book of Enoch, and by 2 Esdras xiii. 3, as well as by the evangelists. The objections raised are—(1) that the personage in vii. 13 is only said to resemble a man, not to be a man, and (2) that the Messiah could hardly have been thus solemnly introduced only to be dismissed again; in fact, in the subsequent deliverance Michael seems to fill the place which one would have expected to be given to the Messiah. Hence (a) some would regard the Being like a son of man (= like a man) as a mere symbol of the people of Israel, for which the explanation of the vision (vv. 18, 22, 27) may seem to plead, and others (b) as an angel, presumably Michael, the great prince-angel who defends the interests of the people of Israel (Dan. x. 21, xii. 1; cp. Enoch xx. 5). One of those, however, who have suggested the latter view "is inclined to look for a still higher Being, whose name is significantly withheld, like that of the numen of Penuel (Gen. xxxii. 29), at the same time a most exalted personal intermediary between God and the world, and a transcendent prototype of the God-pleasing humanity ultimately to be realized in the people of the most High."¹

It is in favour of the second view,² that else-

¹ The scholar referred to is Prof. Julius Grill, from whom Prof. N. Schmidt quotes the description given above (Enc. Biblica, col. 4710).

² Prof. N. Schmidt, the first exponent of the Michael theory (Journal of Biblical Literature, vol. xix., 1900), has pointed this out.

where too in Daniel angels are represented as having the appearance of men (Dan. viii. 15, x. 16, 18; cp. iii. 25, ix. 21, x. 5, xii. 6 f.), and certainly, if an angel really is meant in vii. 13, it must be Michael, for both here and in xii. 1 (where Michael is expressly mentioned) the high angel spoken of has the same function, viz. that of delivering the people of Israel.¹ The objection that if Israel is represented by its prince-angel Michael, the hostile nations ought also to be represented by their angelic guardians, is unimportant. The description is evidently influenced by the primitive Babylonian dragon-myth. Michael corresponds to Marduk,² and his enemies are naturally represented by the beast "dreadful and terrible and strong exceedingly" (vii. 7). To the further objection that the explanation in vv. 18, 22, 27, makes no mention of Michael or of any angel, but of the people of the saints (or holy ones), it is a complete answer that the apocalyptic writer cannot be expected to have had more than a faint comprehension of the old mythic tradition. He is, however, in this case, as we shall see presently, near enough to the mark.

¹ Having regard to vii. 11, 12, we cannot but suppose that the Being resembling a man (v. 13) has come from the slaughter of the beasts.

² This has been well shown by Dr Smythe-Palmer (Bab. Influence on the Bible, 1897, pp. 101 f.), who also maintains that the archangel Michael is "an official manifestation" of Christ "in His relation to the angels." Cp. Bousset, Der Antichrist (1895), p. 151. One step further, and we shall get close up to the truth.

The student who weighs the above arguments will, I hope, conclude that the Being resembling a man in Dan. vii. 13 is very probably no other than the prince - angel Michael. I leave it provisionally open whether "angel" is altogether the right title for this exalted personage. Dan. vii. 13 thus becomes parallel in its presuppositions to Rev. xii. 7, where Michael and his angels are said to have fought against the dragon and his angels.

But, it will be asked, why is Michael called, in Dan. vii. 13, "one like a son of man"? To this more than one answer may be given. (1) He may perhaps be called so because he is one of those heavenly beings (four? or seven?), who mediate between the "Ancient of days" (i.e. the everlasting God) and mankind, and who therefore veil their brightness, and appear in a fully recognizable human form. This, however, is not quite satisfactory. The Most High God is also represented as a man, and in Rev. i. 13 we find the Being "like a son of man" (i.e. in the Book of Revelation, the Messiah) described partly in terms borrowed from the description of the "Ancient of days" in Dan. vii. 9. In fact, the primitive view of Yahwè undoubtedly was that He was in appearance like a glorified man (Gen. i. 26, where Elohim is certainly = Yahwè). (2) Another answer, not without plausibility, may be given. It has already been offered by Zimmern¹ and Gunkel² to account for the phrase "the man" in 2 Esdras xiii. 1, for "the son of man" in the Similitudes of the

¹ K.A.T., 3rd ed., pp. 391 ff.

² Verständniss, p. 47, note 2.

(Ethiopic) Book of Enoch, in the Synoptic Gospels, and in Acts vii. 56, and for "the second man from heaven" (1 Cor. xv. 47, best reading), and, even if not strictly correct, may very likely point in the right direction. The theory is that "man" was the name of one of the Babylonian signs of the zodiac. The four living beings in Ezekiel are most probably derived from the zodiacal signs at the boundary points of the four quarters of the heaven,¹ and which may be respectively—Lion, Eagle, Bull, and Scorpion-man (= Man, in Ezek. i. 10, x. 14, Rev. iv. 7). It is not necessary, however, that the same "man" should be meant in the cryptic terms "son of man" and "man" in the apocalypses and the literature influenced by them, for there were a number of imaginary "men" in the starry heaven of the Babylonians. It is true that we should have expected "bull," the Babylonian prototype of the "being like a man" being Marduk, whose sign was the Bull. Was Marduk originally connected with some one of the manlike beings among the zodiacal signs? It may also appear somewhat strange to us that such a vague-sounding expression as "the man" should be the designation of an important personage in the coming close of the present age.¹ But cryptic titles are surely common enough in apocalyptic literature. Moreover, the spell of Babylon was strong. Titles which were no longer understood (as in the supposed case) survived among peoples whose culture was derived from that great metropolis of ancient culture. This theory is not yet fully proved, but is not unlikely to be correct.

¹ See Zimmern, K.A.T., pp. 631 ff.

The Being resembling a son of man is therefore called so with a deep meaning; he is also, as we have seen, most probably Michael. Besides this, he is (one may with some confidence assert) the Messiah. (1) The most prevalent of the early Jewish interpretations of that remarkable phrase is the Messianic. (2) One has a right to expect the subduer of the four beasts in Dan. vii. to be the Messiah or World-Redeemer, because of the strong Babylonian colouring of this chapter as a whole.¹ The identification here proposed accounts, among other things, for the otherwise strange fact that in Rev. xii. 7 the dragon's antagonist is Michael, whereas in xvii. 14 and xix. 11 the successful warrior is the Messiah. The usual explanation is that in the preliminary struggle Michael, and not the Messiah, is the champion of God's cause, because the Messiah is still a child. But this is a later arrangement due to an ingenious speculator; in the original Apocalypse (or in the document on which Rev. xii. is based) Michael probably was the Messiah. And here it is appropriate to refer to the suggestion mentioned above, that the personage introduced in Dan. vii. 13 is a highly exalted Being, the mediator between God and the world, whose name, like that of the divinity at Penuel,¹ is significantly withheld. For the probability is—though I ask readers to wait for further corroboration of this—that Michael is not the original name of this great Being, but a name which was modified in comparatively later times, and became—to the edification of all pious Jews—Michael, that is, “Who is like God?” To express myself more clearly, I hold it to be as good as certain that Michael is a degraded (but an honourably degraded) deity. And it then becomes very probable that this too is the name referred to in that mysterious passage of the Johannine Apocalypse, “and he hath a name written, which no man knoweth but he himself” (Rev. xix. 12). Into this, however, I cannot now enter; it would involve too great a digression.

¹ N. Schmidt, Enc. Biblica, "Son of Man," § 33.

¹ The four beasts, or living creatures, are suggested by Tiámat and her helpers; the fourth indeed is the dragon Tiámat herself. Cp. Gunkel, Schöpfung, pp. 323 ff.

Who, then, is the “great prince” Michael,

¹ Gen. xxxii. 29; cp. Judges xiii. 17 ff., and see Critica Biblica on the passage. The older criticism is well summed up by G. F. Moore, Commentary on Judges (1895).

with whom we have identified both the "Being like a son of man" and the Messiah? He is not a Hebraized form of any one of the Zoroastrian Amesha Spentas¹ (or Amshaspands), the six councillors and helpers of the great God Ahura Mazda (or Ormazd). He might indeed be so, were it not for his connexion with the dragon-myth, which is primarily Babylonian. But the truth is that he corresponds rather to Marduk (Merodach), the son of Ea, and to Nabu (Nebo), the son of Marduk, — originally perhaps identical (Zimmern) — in the genealogical system of ¹ That is, Holy Immortals. Ahura Mazda is often counted with these exalted beings, thus producing seven. This suggests that originally the Amesha Spentas were not personified abstractions but divinities; cp. the seven planetary gods of the Babylonians. That the seven archangels of the Jews and the early Christians (regarded as a form of belief) partly owe their origin to the Zoroastrian system, is probable enough. But this only means that Babylonian influences worked indirectly through Iranian, or, as one may say, a primitive Babylonian myth had become international. See Enc. Biblica, "Angel," § 4, note 1, and cp. Zimmern, K.A.T., 3rd ed., p. 625.

Babylonian theology. If Michael is not only a warrior but (according to later Jewish writers) the messenger and mediator of the Most High, and an intercessor for man,¹ so also is Marduk.² Nabu, too, is represented³ as a messenger of the gods; he is also the writer-god, by whom the destinies of men ¹ See Test. xii. Patr., Dan 6, "Draw near unto God and unto the angel who prays for you; for he is the mediator between God and man for the peace of Israel"; Levi 5, "And I said to him, I pray, O Lord, tell me thy name . . . And he said, I am the angel who intercedes for the race of Israel, that they may not altogether tread them down." Cp. Judah 25, "And the Lord blessed Levi; the angel of the countenance (blessed) me." In Levi 3 we hear of "the angels of the countenance of the Lord who minister and who supplicate the Lord for all the failings of the righteous." These may be developments of Michael (but cp. Eth. Enoch, xl. 2 ff.). See further Lueken, Michael (1898), pp. 9-12. This writer goes so far as to say (p. 40) that Michael may even be called the "acting Under-god." In Enoch lxix. 14 ff. it is he who is the actual preserver of the world.

² "Ea is rarely approached directly. At his side stands his son Marduk, who acts as a mediator" (Jastrow, Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, p. 276). See also especially Zimmern, op. cit., pp. 372 ff.; Vater, Sohn, und Fürsprecher in der Babyl. Gottesvorstellung, 1896; and Jastrow's review-article, Journal of American Theology, i. 468 ff.

³ See Zimmern, op. cit., pp. 400-403, 454.

are written down on the heavenly tablets, which reminds us of the mysterious writer among the seven celestial men, who sets a mark upon those of the inhabitants of Jerusalem who are destined to life¹ (Ezek. ix. 1-4), and of him who was one of the seven (or four) "white ones," and who had a notebook for registering facts concerning the seventy shepherd-angels in (Ethiopic) Enoch lxxix. 61, xc. 14, 22, which reminds us, as one may probably add, of Michael.

According to the Books of Daniel and Revelation and various early Christian documents² this great superhuman (and originally divine) personage has the work of subduing the evil principle at the end of the present age. (The Biblical passages already indicated are Dan. [vii. 18], xii. 1, Rev. xii. 7, [xix. 11], and to these we shall presently see reason to add Rev. xx. 1.) But is there no trace remaining of his activity at an earlier period? Surely there must be. It is the theory of the ancient East that history consists of recurrent cycles. The tyranny of the power of evil at the close of this age and its final subduing is but the counterpart of that same tyranny and of its (temporary) overthrow in the beginning of the process of the ages. If Michael, the heavenly Messiah, redeems the world and mankind—especially Israel—in the latter days, he must surely have done so when the powers of evil combined to thwart the powers of good in the primæval times. The Babylonian Redeemer—Marduk—achieved the overthrow of Tiâmat “in the beginning,” and though we hear little of his activity at the foundation of the Babylonian people, yet we do know that he was revered as the founder of the sacred cities and temples of Babylonia. And have the Hebrew records nothing parallel to say? Is it not clear from the form of the references to Michael in Daniel that this mighty personage has already a history behind him? Surely, if we open our eyes, we shall see that the older Scriptures are not silent.

¹ See Gunkel, Archiv für Religionswissenschaft, i. 294-300; Zimmern, op. cit., p. 404.

² See Lueken, Michael, pp. 106-110; cp. p. 27.

In the first chapter of Genesis the creation of the world is assigned to Elohim, a name which, as no one can doubt, represents Yahwè (misread Jehovah). But in v. 26 we are told that Elohim said, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." It is not enough to explain that God is represented as including with Himself His celestial court (1 Kings xxii. 19 ff.; Isa. vi. 8; Ps. lxxxix. 5, 6, etc.), and consulting with them, before creating the highest of His works, man,¹ nor that the plural may be that of majesty (a technical term), which is Dillmann's view. It is Yahwè (the Elohim, or Deity, of Israel and de jure of the world) who consults with the exalted divine Beings subordinate to Himself, and proposes to them the creation of Man in the likeness of the divine Beings. It is co-operation, not mere sympathy, that he demands. Just as in Babylonian myths Marduk has the co-operation of another deity in the making of man, so in the Hebrew narrative, which (like the story in Rev. xii.) is based on a mythic tradition, Yahwè the Creator calls for the co-operation of the subordinate deities, or, may it not be ? of a subordinate deity, namely Michael.¹

¹ Prof. Driver (Genesis, ad loc.) remarks that this is the usual Jewish interpretation, and also that of some Christians, notably Franz Delitzsch.

Of Michael's activity in the making of Israel, and in the legendary events which preceded it, the Jewish Midrash asserted that it knew a great deal,² and I venture to think that there is more in this assertion of the Midrash than our too often dull exegesis is willing to recognize. Of course, however, I only refer to this belief as a curious coincidence, for what I offer here has its own critical basis, which cannot owe anything to the non-critical wisdom of the Midrash. I would first direct the reader's attention to a phrase which occurs often in the Old Testament, but is specially characteristic of Genesis, Numbers, and Judges, and which has given great trouble to critics; it is that rendered "angel of the Lord" (correctly enough, except that "the Lord" should be "Yahwè"). The phrase "angel of God (Elohim)" also occurs, and means the same thing. The problem is to account for the fact that the "angel of Yahwè" (or "of Elohim") is not a mere messenger of Yahwè, but equivalent to Yahwè or Elohim himself (see especially Gen. xvi. 13, cp. 7; xxii. 1, cp. 11; Ex. iii. 4, cp. 2; xiii. 21, cp. xiv. 19; Judg. vi. 14, cp. 12; xiii. 23, cp. 3, etc.), and yet in some sense is distinguishable from Yahwè (Gen. xvi. 11, xix. 13, 21, 24; Num. xxii. 31). Other passages which have to be considered are Gen. xlvi. 16, "the angel who redeemed (delivered) me from all evil," where really it is God who is meant; Ex. xxiii. 20-23, "I send an angel before thee . . . my name is in him; . . . if thou obeyest his voice, and doest all that I speak; . . . my angel shall go before thee; . . . and I will destroy them" (cp. xxxii. 34, xxxiii. 2). It may be regarded as in the highest degree probable that in all these passages "messenger" or (in Ex. xxiii. 14, Mal. iii. 1) "my messenger" has been produced by a late editor of the Old Testament out of Michael (i.e. "Who is like God"?). It was Michael who, according to tradition, appeared to the personages of the prehistoric period, and especially Michael¹ who delivered Yahwè's people at the Exodus. This exalted Being is the repository of the Name of God (Ex. xxiii. 21); one might surely say that he is the Name of God. He is also the Face of God (just as Astart or Ashtoreth is called the ¹ The "captain of Yahwè's host" (Josh. v. 13 ff.) is presumably He who was afterwards known as "Michael the chief captain" (Slavonic Enoch, xxii. 6, xxxiii. 10).

¹ The name, as has been already remarked, is probably not the original one. But I must not allow myself to be tempted into side-paths. Suffice it to say that a methodical search in the Old Testament itself has been, as I venture to think, amply rewarded.

² See Lueken, Michael, pp. 15-19.

Face of Baal); "my Face" in Ex. xxxiii. 14 (cp. 15) means "my angel," or rather "Michael." This gives us the key to the singular phrase "the angel of his Face" in Isa. lxiii. 9. The phrase might mean "the angel who has admission to his presence," and so it was probably understood in later times (Eth. Enoch, xl. 2 ff., and the passages quoted from the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, p. 225, note 1). But this does not give a suitable meaning. The original meaning most probably was "Michael his Face"; "Face" and "Name" are both archaic expressions for "manifestation of God." Similarly in Mal. iii. 1, "my messenger" should most probably be "Michael"; the words "the messenger of the covenant whom ye delight in" are, judging from one's experience elsewhere, a scribe's interpolation. Again, in Eccus. xliii. 26, where the Hebrew text has "angel," it is very possible that the true reading is "Michael." That Michael is the personage who is meant has already been seen by Prof. N. Schmidt in the Temple Bible (Ecclesiasticus, p. 170), but my own experience of types of corruption leads me to go further. Nor is this all. In Gen. xxi. 30, where Jacob is said to have called the name of the place Peniel (Penuel), it is difficult not to see one of the titles of this great Being Michael, which was transferred to the sacred spot where he appeared; and the traditional name of the numen of Peniel (as I hope to show elsewhere) was either Michael or that older name out of which, as has been said above, the edifying name Michael may have been produced. And lastly, in Rev. xx. 1, where all the commentators have been puzzled at the mention of an angel, we can scarcely doubt that ὁ ἄγγελος is a translation of an already corrupt text of an older Hebrew apocalypse, in which mal'āk was written instead of mīkāl'ēl.

There is much more that might be said to show the need that exists of a more searching criticism, and the sure prospect of an abundant recompense. Many questions as yet unanswered are, I am sure, capable of being answered. What, for instance, is the meaning of Belial (Beliar), of Sammael, of Malchira (Ascens. of Isaiah, i. 8)? How came the warlike Messiah to be called in Rev. xix. 13 "the Logos of God"? What made Philo call the Logos ἀρχάγγελος and identify him with the מַלְאָכִים יְהוָה? I do not think that Bousset, Lueken, and Charles—thorough scholars as they are—have seen quite all that may already be discerned. And even the least of the problems which centre in the title "the Son of Man" is worthy of the keenest scrutiny.

On the questions connected with the phrase "Son of man," apart from that here raised as to "Michael" (on which it suffices to refer to Lueken's monograph, 1898), see Driver's learned article "Son of Man" in Hastings, Dictionary of the Bible, and especially the well-arranged and keenly critical article of N. Schmidt in the Encyclopædia Biblica, where also will be found a full exposition and examination of theories proposed by other scholars. See also Baldensperger, Die messianisch-apokalyptischen Hoffnungen; Charles, The Book of Enoch, and (when published) The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs; Gunkel, Das vierte Buch Esra in Kautzsch, Die Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen; Volz, Jüdische Eschatologie; Bousset, Religion des Judenthums, and his lecture, Die Jüdische Apokalyptik. In conclusion, note Prof. Bousset's striking words (p. 59 of the Lecture), "In the idea of the Son of Man a pre-existent Christology, as it were, lies hidden. The house is ready. The faith in Jesus only needed to enter it."

NOTE V., to p. 85.

Fresh evidence is here offered for there being a mythic substratum to Matt. i. 18. I begin (A) with the Assyrian and Babylonian evidence (a) with regard to the belief in divine generation. In col. 1, line 5, of the Annals of Ashurbanipal the birth of the king is thus spoken of, "and whom they (the gods Ashur and Sin) formed in the midst of his mother" (Keilinschriftliche Bibliothek, ii. 153; cp. Records of the Past, first series, i. 57). Similarly it is said with reference to Nebuchadrezzar, in the India House Inscription (col. 1, lines 23 to 25), "when the Lord of lords made me Marduk, he prepared well my birth in the mother (i.e. mother's womb)"; see Keilinschr. Bibl., iii. 2, p. 11; Records of the Past, first series, v. 113. (b) As to the belief in the divine sonship of kings. In a strongly mythological dialogue between Ashurbanipal and the god Nebo it is said, "Small wast thou, O Ashurbanipal, when I committed thee to the goddess, the queen of Nineveh; weak wast thou, O Ashurbanipal, when thou satest upon the lap of the goddess, the queen of Nineveh. Of two of the four breasts," etc. Elsewhere this king appears as a child on the bosom of the mother-goddess, Bêlit-Istar.¹ See also Cheyne,

¹ For both passages see Zimmern, K.A.T., 3rd ed., p. 379; cp. A. Jeremias, Das Alte Testament im Lichte des Alten

Book of Psalms, 1st ed., on Ps. ii. 7, and cp. his Origin of the Psalter, pp. 130, 252.

B. Egyptian evidence.—The Egyptian kings, as M. Maspero assures us, were viewed realistically as “blood-relations of the sun-god, some through their father, others through their mother, directly begotten by the god.” “Their souls as well as their bodies have a supernatural origin; each soul being a double detached from Horus, the successor of Osiris, and the first to reign alone over Egypt. This divine double is infused into the royal infant at birth, in the same manner as the ordinary double is incarnate in common mortals. . . . It awaked to full self-consciousness in those who ascended the throne at the moment of their accession. From that time to the hour of their death, and beyond it, all that they possessed of ordinary humanity was completely effaced; they were from henceforth only the sons of Ra.

Orients, p. 37. Many representations of Istar suckling a child have been found in the excavations, both at Babylon and elsewhere (Zimmern, p. 429, note 5; Jeremias, p. 37, note 1).

Their complex nature was revealed at the outset in the form and arrangement of their names" (Maspero, Dawn of Civilization, p. 259).

This is of special importance as showing how ancient Orientals would naturally understand the phrase "Son of God" as applied to a greater than any historical king. There was a divine element in the human nature of an Egyptian king, but it only became self-conscious at the moment of the king's accession. Another symbolic representation is equally instructive. The Egyptian king was potentially a son of God as soon as born, but actually he became such as soon as he ascended the throne. We should most naturally say that the king's accession synchronized with his adoption to be a son of God (cp. Ps. ii. 7,¹ “Thou art my son ; this day have I begotten thee”). And this was no doubt one of the ideas current in Egypt on this subject. Hear Maspero again. “From the moment that the Pharaoh became god upon earth, the gods of heaven, his fathers or his brothers, and the goddesses, recognized him as their son, and, according to the ceremonial imposed by custom in such cases, consecrated his adoption by offering him the breast to suck, as they would have done to their own child” (ibid., p. 263).

¹ I fear that the text of this passage is open to criticism (see my Book of Psalms, 1904, pp. 6, 7, crit. and exeg. notes). But the received text may represent one of the views current respecting the Messiah in the later period, viz. that he became the "son of God" on his assumption of the regal office. Note the earlier form of Luke iii. 22b, referred to at another point, and cp. N. Schmidt, Enc. Biblica, "Son of God," § 6.

Still further light on the materialistic theology of Egypt and the East comes from the temple at Luxor, with its very singular sculptures representing the accouchement of the mother of Amen-hotep III., and two royal children, who are presented to the great Theban god Amen, nursed by another deity. More commonly noticed by travellers is the representation on the wall of the sanctuary of the great temple of Isis at Philæ, of Ptolemy Philadelphus suckled by the goddess.

The Ptolemies, as successors of the Egyptian kings, assumed such titles as "son of the sun" and "son of Isis and Osiris." The violence done to fact in the representation of Alexander as a son of the god Ammon is referred to elsewhere. So deeply rooted in the East was the belief in the divine origin of kings. The notion of kingly "glory" (karenô) in the Zendavesta is also closely connected with the belief in the divinity of kings. All this has a direct bearing on the spread of the imperial cultus in the east of the Roman Empire, which is in veiled language so prominently referred to in the Johannine Apocalypse. ✓

NOTE VI., to p. 77.

That the grandly attired "woman" is the mother of the Messiah, according to the intention of the Jewish narrator, is clear. It is, however, intelligible enough that such a picture did not please everyone, especially after the true meaning of the original story had faded away. Of this, the narrative in Matt. i. 18-23 seems to be a proof. Nor is other evidence wanting. Bousset (Offenbarung, p. 413) points out that the "virgin" was by some taken to be the Ecclesia (cp. "the virgin-daughter Zion," 2 Kings xix. 31, Lam. ii. 13). See e.g. the fourth vision of the Shepherd of Hermas, where the Ecclesia appears as a virgin beside the dragon; it should be added that, although the work of a Christian, the Shepherd may be taken as a repository of Jewish notions and ideas. Abbott too (Enc. Bib., "Gospels," § 21) refers to a very early letter from the local church of Lyons given by Eusebius (Hist. Eccles., v. 1, 45), where the "Virgin Mother" signifies the Church. It is noteworthy that Hermas, though he speaks of the dragon, says nothing of the Christ; the conqueror of the dragon, as Bousset remarks, is the virgin. Among other instances of the use of παρθένος, "virgin," for "the Ecclesia," Abbott quotes the statement of Abercius (about 190 A.D.) that "the pure Virgin grasped the Fish" (i.e. Christ), and a passage in the Epistle to Diognetus (ad fin.), οὐδε Εἷδα φθείρεται ἀλλὰ παρθένος πιστεύεται.

Naturally, too, the conception of the Virgin-mother of Christ as a purely superhuman being found a home in a heretical sect, such as that which Epiphanius (Hær., 79) denounces, and whose priestesses, he tells us, offered cakes to the Virgin, whence their name Collyridians (from κολλυρίς, a cake). Here we cannot fail to discern the fusion of the Mother of Christ with some form of the Asiatic Mother-goddess. For obviously the cakes spoken of are precisely analogous to the cakes offered both in Babylonia and (see Jer. vii. 18) in Judah to the "Queen of Heaven." Later on, however, the leading Church authorities seem to have considered that the conception of Mary as being in one aspect superhuman, embodied in Rev. xii. 1, had a claim to some distinct recognition.

The data of the Apocalypse and of the First Gospel were therefore combined, and a new conception of Mary became widely prevalent. Lovers of Christian art will at once realize this, and will recall the pictures of the Madonna di Misericordia and those old mosaics and paintings in which the Virgin (how unlike the mater speciosa of Jacopone's hymn!) is placed beside Christ, on an equality with Him, and often in an attitude of deprecation.¹ In this position of gracious patroness and protectress the glorified Virgin is not without a slight but real resemblance to the idealized goddess Istar, who was perhaps originally conceived of as a virgin.² For must we not be fair even to the heathen? And who could wish to speak lightly of the "compassionate mother of men,"³ upon whom were poured out by the Babylonians such treasures of love and gratitude? It is also surely not out of place to recall that Eshmunazar, king of Sidon, built a temple to Astart (Ashtoreth) as the "name of Baal," i.e. probably as manifesting the softer and more gracious aspect of the divine nature. As Dr Paton very truly remarks, "Astart of Canaan has the closest affinity with the goddess Istar of Babylonia."¹

¹ Mrs Jameson, Legends of the Madonna.

² See Zimmern, K.A.T., 3rd ed., ii. 424, 432, cp. 429.

³ Cp. Sayce, Hibbert Lectures on Babylonian Religion (1887); Jastrow, Religion of Babylonia and Assyria (1898).

NOTE VII., to p. 91.

That Luke i. 34 f. is a later insertion, is shown with much probability by Prof. Schmiedel, in the course of his elaborate treatment of the position of the New Testament writers, Enc. Biblica, "Mary, Mother of Jesus," cols. 2952 - 2969; cp. Usener, "Nativity," § 16, col. 3349. Prof. Gunkel, however (Zum religionsgeschichtlichen Verständniss des N.T., pp. 67 f.), denies that Luke i. 34 f. interrupts the context. "Turn the words back into Hebrew, and they give a good connexion." Gunkel also remarks that the narrator in Luke i. does not mention the conception of Mary, perhaps because he reverently conceals the special miracle in the birth of Jesus. This scholar's arguments, however, seem less convincing than those of Schmiedel. Dr A. Wright (Synopsis of the Gospels in Greek, 2nd ed., 1903, Introd., p. xlii.) may also be consulted. He thinks it evident "that the doctrine (?) of the Virgin-birth was not generally revealed in the early part of the apostolic age."

¹ Syria and Palestine (1902), p. 51.

NOTE VIII., to p. 92.

The explanation of the story of the Virgin-birth as connected ultimately with the myth of the Queen of Heaven, the Mother of the Conqueror of the mythic dragon, suggests the true origin of the narratives of the Magi and of the massacre of the Innocents. Both, from our present point of view, are, not history, but pious transformations of current mythic stories. Prof. Dieterich (Zeitschrift für die Neutestamentl. Wissenschaft, iii. 1 ff.) takes a different line. He supposes that there is a historical substratum to the popular story of the journey of the Magi in Matt. ii. 1-12, viz. the journey of the Armenian king Tiridates to Rome, accompanied by Magi, in the time of the emperor Nero. Tiridates, himself a Magian, is said to have initiated Nero into the "magic repasts" (i.e. the Mithraic mysteries), and bending his knee, and lifting his hands, called him Lord (δεσπότης), and worshipped him (Plin., Hist. Nat., xxx. 16 ; Dio Cassius, xxxii. 1 f., cp. xliii. 5). Usener (Enc. Biblica, "Nativity," § 18) accepts this theory, which Pfeiderer (Das Christusbild, p. 101, note 1) also finds "attractive." Usener also thinks that "tidings of the Neronic persecutions spread from Rome may have had their share in bringing about the introduction of the picture of a bloodthirsty tyrant into the story of the Childhood." He adds that "a massacre of innocents, and, as the motive for it, alarm at the threatened advent of a new ruler, were already current material for legend, as is shown by the romantic story of Marathus concerning the birth of Augustus (Suetonius, Aug., 94)." I do not know whether any of the conservative theological reviewers of the Encyclopædia Biblica have brought arguments against these theories. My own objections arise from a difference of method. With Gunkel, I am of opinion that in accounting for popular Messianic stories we ought, in the first instance, to try a mythological solution, which is less likely to be wrong than a solution suggested by some apparent resemblance of reported historical facts. I refrain, therefore, from supposing a connexion between the story of the Magi and the reported journey of Tiridates. The offering of worship or homage by wise men from the East (the home of "wisdom," 1 Kings v. 30) to the wise God (cp. the wise God Marduk among the Babylonians), manifested as a human child, was a necessary part of the pre-Christian "international" myth of the Redeemer to which I have referred, that "in all things he himself might have the pre-eminence." Similarly, too, the important detail of the guiding star (cp. Enc. Biblica, "Stars," § 5) is not to be connected, as by Soltau (The Birth of Jesus Christ, p. 38), with portents seen in the skies on the birth of Augustus, the future "lord of the world" (Suetonius, Aug., 94), much less with Num. xxiv. 17, but with a form of the Birth-story which spoke of the Mother of Christ as a supernatural Being who had a mystic connexion with the stars (Rev. xii. 1), or with some special star (see the reference at the end of section C, in NOTE II.).

With regard to the story of the massacre of the Innocents—historically a most improbable tradition, however religiously edifying in the hands of preachers and poets—all that we can grant to the non-mythologists is that tidings of the Neronian persecution may perhaps have increased the interest of some of the Christians in that story. The cruel king Herod may in fact have seemed an anticipation of the cruel emperor Nero. But is not all this going very much out of our way? Herod's cruelty, exaggerated by popular hatred, became proverbial. It was natural, therefore, that he should be substituted in that pious Haggadah of which I have spoken for the mythic dragon. The massacre itself is clearly analogous to the drowning of the Hebrew children by order of the king of Mişrim (Ex. i. 22); the careful reader will remember that the king of Mişrim (i.e. the king whoever he may be at any time) is identified by Ezekiel (xxix. 3) with the great dragon of the cosmogonic tradition (see Enc. Biblica, "Dragon," §§ 1, 4). There is also a more distant connexion with the mythic ravaging of "cities" and "men" by the monster called labbu (lion), i.e. Tiâmat the lion-headed. Cp. Zimmern, K.A.T., 3rd ed., p. 498; Gunkel, Schöpfung, pp. 28, 418; and on the other side, the popular but competent booklet of W. Soltau, translated by M. Canney, The Birth of Jesus Christ (London: A. & C. Black, 1903).

NOTE IX., to p. 104.

The plural (fathers), with reference to the mission of the divine hero Hibil-Ziwâ, is surprising. We also find Hibil-Ziwâ spoken of as "his son, who is his brother" (i.e. Mandâ d'Hayyês). The two are brothers as belonging to the same category. The elder brothers (i.e. the beings of the same category who were called into existence earlier) are reckoned as "fathers" of the younger (Brandt, Mand. Religion, p. 139, note 2). Such mythology can hardly have left any trace in the Bible, unless Gunkel is right in finding one in Rev. xii. 17 (see his Schöpfung, p. 382). The rule is that Christ is represented as having only adopted brethren, and but one Father, the God of gods, by whom He is sent, not indeed into Hades but into the world of living men (Rev. viii. 31, Gal. iv. 4, John iv. 34, etc.). This agrees with the common Babylonian representation of Marduk as sent by his divine father Ea to help mankind (cp. Zimmern, K.A.T., 3rd ed., p. 172). There are passages, however, in the Babylonian epic of Creation, (Tablets iii. and iv.) where this same god is spoken of as having the older gods as his fathers. The expression is therefore a genuine part of the mythic story of the Redeemer. It should be noticed that Hibil-Ziwâ corresponds to the god Marduk in the Babylonian myth, just as Krûn, the "firstborn king of darkness" in the Mandæan myth, corresponds to Tiâmat in the Babylonian (Brandt, Mand. Schr., p. 150, note 3; cp. Gunkel, Schöpf., p. 364, note 2).

NOTE X., to p. 101.

The explanation of the sign of the prophet Jonah given in Matt. xii. 40 is wanting in the parallel passage in Luke, where this substitute is given, "For as Jonas became a sign to the Ninevites, so shall also the Son of man be to this generation" (Luke xi. 30). This suggests the most probable transition to Matt. xii. 41,

“The men of Nineveh shall appear as accusers to this generation, and shall prove it guilty.”

The “sign” is really the reverse of a sign. How indeed could it be otherwise, when Jesus distinctly refused to work “signs” (cp. Mk. viii. 12)? Nor could the deliverance of Jonah from the sea-monster’s belly have been represented by the original writer as a sign to the Ninevites, for neither did they see it, nor, so far as the story goes, were they told of it (see Enc. Biblica, “Gospels,” § 140 b; “Jonah,” § 8). It is strange that Wellhausen, in his recent translation of Matthew with notes (1904), should prefer the explanation in Matt. xii. 40 to that in Luke xi. 30. Still as an early Christian statement, quite apart from its setting, the passage here commented upon has its value.

NOTE XI., to pp. 113, 128.

A. The death of Christ “for our sins” was necessary “according to the Scriptures,” says St Paul (1 Cor. xv. 3; cp. v. 4 and Matt.

xxvi. 54 and 56). Here there may be a reference to some widely received writings, not in our Canon. In 2 Esdras vii. 29 the death of "my son, the Christ" is spoken of; the context gives no reason for supposing a Christian interpolation. Some earlier work may have contained a similar statement. At any rate we are safe in supposing that St Paul had in his mind Isa. liii. 5, 7, 9, and Zech. xii. 10, the original meaning of which passages does not concern us here. But he would hardly have given such an interpretation to these passages, if there had not been some widely, though not universally, current belief on the subject of the death of the world's Redeemer, and this belief is most easily accounted for as the outcome of a semi-mythic Oriental tradition. That the death of the solar deity Marduk was spoken of, and his grave shown, in Babylonia, is an ascertained fact (Zimmern, K.A.T., 3rd ed., p. 371); the death of Osiris and of other gods was an Egyptian belief (Maspero, Dawn of Civilization), and, though a more distant parallel, one may here refer also to the empty grave of Zeus pointed out in Crete.

B. The Scriptures referring to the Resurrection may well have included Hos. vi. 2, itself too perhaps influenced phraseologically by a floating mythic story. But surely St Paul also had in his mind some later Jewish writing which referred to the resurrection of the Messiah. Jonah i. 17 would certainly not justify St Paul's expression, "on the third day."

NOTE XII., to p. 140.

The Hebrew text of Ecclesiasticus now printed amounts to about two-thirds of the whole book. We must not, however, exaggerate the boon, for the problems of the text will occupy scholars for generations to come. I may remark here that caution should be used in arguing from the apparent parallelisms between passages of Ecclesiasticus and passages in our Psalms. For instance, the parallelism between Ecclus. xxxvi. 6 f. and Ps. lxxiv. 10 f., 13, might be held to exclude a Maccabean date for Ps. lxxiv. But, as Prof. N. Schmidt has pointed out (Ecclesiasticus in the Temple Bible, Introd., p. xxvi.), Ecclus. xxxvi. 1-17 is manifestly an interpolation, which "voices the feelings of a people sorely oppressed by a foreign enemy." Dr Schmidt supposes the Syrian oppression to be that referred to. Israel Levy however remarks that though one might for a little while suppose the prayer to be of the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, the reference may be to any other critical period of Jewish history (L'Ecclésiastique, ii. 169). Such arguments as that here referred to are of secondary importance. On Ps. lxxiv. see my Book of Psalms (1904), i. 326 ff.

NOTE XIII., to p. 145.

It is only a brief sketch of Prof. Winckler's views upon the prophets that can be given here. So much, however, must be given because this scholar has at his command a large number of new Assyriological facts, and even if his explanation of the facts be inadequate, it must not be ignored. For my own part, I think that, owing to that deficient interest in religion of which I have spoken, Prof. Winckler practically leaves out of sight a number of old but important facts, contained in at any rate the most representative Hebrew prophecies. He is of opinion that the priests of the sanctuary on Mount Sinai, where a god called Jahu (Yahu) was worshipped, had, like priests at other sanctuaries, speculated on the divine nature, and developed a high doctrine of the divine Lord of all life, whom, by a modification of Jahu, they called Jahwè (Yahwè). This doctrine was accepted by the neighbouring clans, whom David had formed into the tribe and kingdom of Judah, and was imposed by this successful adventurer—a native of the southern border-land—upon the older tribes of Israel whom he conquered, as the national religion. The same refined religious view was held by the prophets, —nebi'im, i.e. “announcers,”—a class of men known in Assyria as well as in the land of Israel. These “were clear-sighted, educated men, who were superior to the people,” and whose action was partly at any rate political. They were not always on the same side. When the kings oppressed the people, the prophets opposed them, and when the priests became the ruling class, dictating the policy of the king, and in their own interest encouraged Baal-worship and fleeced the people, the prophets were against the priests. One of them (Amos) even became a political agitator, for he adopted the political idea of a restored kingdom of David (the pan-Israelite idea), and advocated it in Northern Israel, while at a later time, as Winckler reads history, Jeremiah became a decided adherent of the Chaldean party.

All this is far from satisfactory to those who live in intellectual intercourse with the great Hebrew prophets. We will not deny the possibility that the development of the higher conception of Yahwè may owe much to priests of whose activity no record has remained, and we must heartily agree that this higher conception was taken up by the Israelitish prophets—in fact, such a theory best accounts for a considerable number of exegetical facts. But when we look into the evidence offered by Winckler for the existence of Assyrian “prophets,” we find that the “prophecy” quoted (by Peiser the Assyriologist) expresses the utmost servility towards the king, upon whom evidently his future depends. In fact, the speaker of the prophecy appears to be—as König well points out¹—just such a prophet as those described in 1 Kings xxii. 6, who said to Ahab (doubtless for a fee), “Go up, for the Lord shall deliver it into the hand of the king.” From such prophets Isaiah (xxviii. 7), Micah (iii. 5, 11), and Jeremiah (xxiii. 14 ff., xxviii. 1 ff., xxix. 8) distinguish themselves with no hesitating voice. Amos, too, expressly tells us that he was no professional prophet (vii. 14).

¹ Die Babel-Bibel-Frage und die wissenschaftliche Methode (1904), p. 17. König also gives the prophecy in full from Peiser, Mitteilungen der vorderasiatischen Gesellschaft (1898), p. 257.

To the objection that in his earlier statements he represented the greater Hebrew prophets too much as mere men of their age, Winckler now replies that from the point of view of secular history even an Isaiah is and must be a man of his age. "History has to explain the man from his age, and not from his significance for eternity." But should not a historian confess that there are phenomena in some lives which simply by the study of historical circumstances he is powerless to explain? If Winckler had admitted this, his attempted explanation would perhaps have had more force. The greater prophets of Israel were neither mere thinkers who sought to popularize their religious theory, nor political agitators or pamphleteers, nor even popular tribunes; they were enthusiasts filled with a passion for Yahwè.¹

For Winckler's views, see passages in his monograph on Ancient Western Asia in Helmolt's Weltgeschichte, vol. iii. (1901), pp. 204-206, 210-212, and in his Geschichte Israels, vol. i., pp. 37-42, supplemented by Abraham als Babylonier, Joseph als Aegypter, pp. 35-38. It may be mentioned that Kohler and Peiser in their joint work, Hammurabi's Gesetze, i. (1904), p. 142, take a view which most will consider sounder than that of Winckler.

NOTE XIV., to p. 148.

Can the name Amraphel really come from Hammurabi in spite of the troublesome final (e)l? Prof. Hommel (Die altorientalischen Denkmäler und das A.T., 1898, p. 59) still thinks this possible. He holds that the Hebrew writer used a cuneiform record, in which the form of the name was AMMU-DAGAL, i.e. Ammu-rahbi (explained "the Uncle is my breadth"), and that the translator, instead of rahab, took the synonym raphal, and all the more readily because there was a Hebrew personal name $\rho\alpha\phi\alpha\lambda$ (Sept., 1 Chr. iii. 21; var. $\rho\alpha\phi\alpha\iota\alpha$). It so happens that both Rephael, the form which cod. B of the Sept. of 1 Chr. l.c. seems to presuppose, equally with Rephaiah (the Massoretic reading), are expansions of the ethnic designation Rapha (whence the well-known Rephaim). This may put the well-informed reader on a better track than Prof. Hommel's. Cp. Critica Biblica on 2 K. xv. 19 (Pul, king of Asshur). In the text of the Lecture sufficient reason, I hope, has been given for urging at any rate ~~suspense~~ suspension of judgment relative to the historical character of the Chedorlaomer episode, and for hesitating to follow M. Loisy, when he says that, "in spite of some critics, this episode is a sufficiently good certificate of personal existence for the Father of the Faithful" (Études bibliques, 3rd ed., 1908, p. 176). I may here quote from Dr Driver (Genesis, Introd., pp. xlix. f.): "They (the monuments) thus fall far short of demonstrating its historical character; and still less do they demonstrate that the rôle attributed to Abraham in the same chapter is historical." I am of course only concerned here with the bearing of archæological facts, which some have wrongly supposed to prove the historical character of Gen. xiv., and which even M. Loisy, so keen a New Testament critic, does not seem to have adequately considered.

√ ¹ See "Babylon and the Bible," Hibbert Journal, Oct. 1903, pp. 65 ff. (section on Winckler).

NOTE XV., to p. 182.

It is a venial error, and yet a hindrance to progress, that the Authorized Version of the Old Testament generally gives "Assyria," where the Hebrew text has "Asshûr." For "Asshur," as pointed out in the Lecture, has two possible meanings, viz. (1) Assyria (which most probably the latest scribes and editors supposed to be the meaning of the word everywhere), and (2) a region, sometimes of larger, sometimes of smaller extent, in N. Arabia, adjoining the land of Mişrim or Muşri. The first scholar to suggest the second meaning, as possible in some passages, was Hommel,¹ who in these cases identifies the Hebrew Asshûr with the Ashûr mentioned, together with Muşr, in an Arabian inscription in the Minæan dialect, which, in agreement with Glaser, he refers to the ancient Minæan empire ("before 1000 B.C.," Hommel). Instead, however, of following this scholar, who is hardly critical enough, I have gone my own way in applying Glaser's discovery of a N. Arabian Ashûr to the purposes of Old Testament criticism. It is almost beyond reasonable doubt that not only Asshur but Ashhur often occurs in passages where a corruption which is not altogether without method conceals it from unpractised eyes. Fortunately, however, there is still one phrase (1 Chr. ii. 24, iv. 5) in the received text in which Ashhur still exists; "Ashhur (not Ashur, as ✓ the Auth. Version has), the father of Tekoa" are the words. Tekoa here is not very essential; it is important, however, that the Septuagint preserves traces of another reading, "Caleb went in to Ephratah, wife of Hezron his father, and she bore him Ashhur." Now Caleb and Ephratah are both, most probably, N. Arabian names. In v. 19 the same tradition occurs in another form, "Caleb took to him Ephrath, who bore him Hûr"; in fact Hûr, like the Egyptian form Haru (p. 153, note 6), is a mutilated form of Ashhur.

¹ According to this scholar, the southern Asshur extended from the Wady el-Arish to the region of Beersheba and Hebron (Ancient Hebrew Tradition, 1897, p. 244).

There are some passages in which the N. Arabian situation of Asshur is too plain to be mistaken. For instance (a, b) in Genesis xxv. † 8, 18. In the former passage "Asshurim" is a son of Dedan. In the latter we read, "And they dwelt from Havilah unto Shûr, which is eastward of Mişrim (of course not Mişraim, "Egypt"), in the direction of Asshûr." The most various conjectures have been hazarded to account for the troublesome Asshur; but now we can venture to say that the riddle is solved. Shûr too is doubtless a mutilated form of the same name.¹ Cp. Gen. xvi. 61, xx. 1, and other passages.

(c) Gen. ii. 14, "Hiddekel; that is it which goeth towards the east of Assyria." So at least Auth. Version renders, but the Hebrew has "Asshûr." The mention of Havilah in v. 11 points to Arabia. All the rest can be harmonized with this. The theory that Hiddekel is the Tigris is by no means proved.² Its plausibility depends upon the identification of "Perâth" in v. 15 with the Euphrates. But, as we have seen above, Ephrath and Asshur naturally go together. It is very possible that Perâth or Ephrath is first the name of a district and then of a stream in N. Arabia.

¹ Most have seen that the closing words of Gen. xxv. 18a are a gloss. But the gloss has not been understood. Shûr is the short for Asshûr (cp. Hûr the short for Ashhûr), and Asshur is in N. Arabia.

² See Enc. Biblica, "Hiddekel" (Johns).

(d) Num. xxiv. 22. The mention of "Asshur" with "Kain" (the Kenites) points to N. Arabia. The larger Asshur was a conquering power, and in so far resembled Assyria. V. 24 is a riddle, but most riddles are solved by patience.

(e) 2 Sam. ii. 9. But for the mention of "Gilead" no one would doubt that "the Ashurites" meant the people called in Gen. xxv. 3 "Asshurim." There is a riddle awaiting solution—a test of the methods of the "established" criticism.¹

(f) Isa. xix. 23–25. Egypt, Assyria, and Canaan do not form a natural triad, nor is it enough to explain the opening clause of v. 23 by the remark of Delitzsch that "the road of communication between these (Egypt and Assyria) passes through Canaan." To Mişrim, Asshur, and Canaan, however, no exception can be taken.

¹ I may refer to Critica Biblica on this passage; for the prevalent view see H. P. Smith, in the International Commentary Series.

(g) Ezek. xxiii. 5, 7, 9, 12, 23; the benê Asshur here are most naturally regarded as a N. Arabian people. The religious influence of N. Arabia is likely to have been stronger and more persistent than that of Assyria. It is true, Babylonian influence, direct and indirect, must have been powerful, especially in the department of mythology. But as the text of Ezek. xxiii. stands, Babylonia is, oddly enough, less prominent in the prophetic indictment than Assyria. Still stranger is the language in which the Babylonians are introduced. Is it really credible that "the acquaintance of Judah with the Chaldæans came to pass through pictorial representations, frescoes with pictures of Chaldæan warriors which had been imported from Babylon, and stirred up in the Judæans the wish to form personal relations with those who were thus represented"? Yet this is how the most thorough recent commentator (Krätzschar) sets forth Ezekiel's meaning.

(h) Ezekiel xxvii. 23. One of the most learned of liberal-conservative scholars (Eduard König) insists very strongly that a N. Arabian Asshur or Ashur cannot be meant here, and praises Hommel for not having used this as one of his proof-passages.¹ "Chilmad," he remarks, "should be 'all Media,'" following Bertholet and other scholars. Evidently this friend (pro tempore) of Hommel has overlooked the extreme improbability of such a sequence as "Sheba, Asshur, Media," and the fact that the Septuagint has not Chilmad but Charman (χαρμαν), which is most naturally explained as a corruption of Raḥman, i.e. Jerahmeel (cp. Num. xiii. 22, "Ahiman, Sheshai, and Talmi," names produced by popular corruption from Jerahmeel, Asshur, Ishmael).

(i) 1 Chr. xiii. 5, Auth. Version, "Shihor of Egypt"; Rev. Version, "Shihor (the brook) of Egypt." Cp. Josh. xii. 8, "Shihor which is before Egypt." The common supposition is that the writers of these passages gave an idealistic extension to the S.W. frontier of Canaan. To this and all other theories which presuppose the general or even universal correctness of the vocalization Mišrain, there are cogent objections.¹ Hommel, however, changed the position of the question by showing that there was a southern Asshur (or Ashur). We can now easily believe that the naḥal or wady of Mišrim (i.e. of the Arabian Muṣri) was also at an early period called the wady of Asshur, of rather Ashḥur, and either then or at a later time, by a popular corruption, called the wady Shiḥor. Shiḥor, in a word, is a modification of Ashḥur.

¹ König, Fünf neue arabische Landschaftsnamen im Alten Testament (1902), p. 16, note 4.

Another corruption of Asshur or Ashḥur is most probably Geshur (Hommel wrongly, Gê-Shûr, "valley of Shur"). There are also well-attested mutilations of the two names, viz. Shûr (see above) and Ḥûr respectively. Ḥûr has, no doubt, often been thought to be a Hebraized form of the Egyptian Hor (Horus). It is, however, really of N. Arabian affinities, as a study of the passages where the name occurs (see especially Num. xxxi. 8, Josh. xiii. 21) will show. We may compare the name Turi-Aa, which occurs on the cuneiform contract tablet lately found at Gezer. Here Turi is almost certainly the short for Situri, i.e. Ashtar (cp. Johns, Palestine Exploration Fund Statement, July 1904, p. 239). The same tablet also gives us Huruasi, the first part of which is, according to Hebrew analogies, the short for Ashhur. Mr Johns suggests a possible Semitic divine name Hur, which, however, at the present stage of our inquiry seems unnecessary.

¹ See Enc. Biblica, "Shihor of Egypt."

For completeness' sake it may be added that Achish (the name of a "Philistine" king) probably comes from Ashhur, and that this suggests a very possible origin for Kûsh (the name of a N. Arabian region bordering on the Israelite territory). "Sisera," as has been pointed out by me elsewhere, also probably comes from Asshur. Here I must pause. Let no one disparage such inquiries. These names are not mere dry stubble. They symbolize facts of pre-historic as well as historic Palestine in which no student can fail to be interested. When a new edition of Dr G. B. Gray's instructive work on Hebrew Proper Names (London: A. & C. Black) becomes necessary, such a treatment as that of which I have here given a very inadequate idea, when extended to other analogous names in Semitic inscriptions, will give many new and valuable results, and require many current theories to be sometimes considerably qualified, sometimes altogether abandoned. If to go forward is arduous, to stand still is fatal to the best interests of study.

A Catalogue

of

Williams & Norgate's

Publications

Divisions of the Catalogue

	PAGE
I. THEOLOGY	3
II. PHILOSOPHY, PSYCHOLOGY	29
III. ORIENTAL LANGUAGES, LITERATURE, AND HISTORY .	34
IV. PHILOLOGY, MODERN LANGUAGES	39
V. SCIENCE, MEDICINE, CHEMISTRY, ETC.	46
VI. BIOGRAPHY, ARCHÆOLOGY, LITERATURE, MISCEL- LANEOUS	56

FULL INDEX OVER PAGE

London

Williams & Norgate

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

1904

INDEX.

Abyssinia, Shikab al Din, 37.
Adam and Eve, Book of, Malan, 36.
Acyonium, Liverpool Marine Biol. C. Mems., 50.
Algæ, Cooke, 47.
America, Creation Myths of, Curtin, 57.
Anarchy and Law, Brewster, 29.
Anatomy, Cleland, 47; Cunningham Memoirs, 48; Lockwood, 51; Spalteholz, 54.
Anthropology, Prehistoric, Avebury, 56; Engelhardt, 57; Laing, 59; Reliquia Aquitanica, 59.
Apocalypse, Bleek, 8; Clark, 16.
Apostles and Apostolic Times, Dobschütz, 4; Hausrath, 18; Weissdöcker, 7; Zeller, 9.
Statutes of, edit. G. Horner, 26.
Apostolic Succession, Clark, 16.
Arabic, Chrestomathy, Brunnnow, 34.
Grammar, Socin, 37.
Koran, 36.
Poetry, Faisullah Bhai, 35; Lyall, 36; Nöldeke, 36.
Ascidia, Liverpool Marine Biol. Mems., 50.
Assyrian, Dictionary, Muss-Arnolt, 36; Norris, 36.
Grammar, Delitsch, 34.
Language, Delitsch, 34.
Assyriology, Brown, 56; Delitsch, 10, 34; Evans, 35; Sayce, 12; Schrader, 9.
Astigmatic Tests, Pray, 52; Snellen, 54.
Astronomy, Cunningham Mems., V., 48; Memoirs of Roy. Astronom. Soc., 62.
Augustine, St., Confessions of, Harnack, 18.
Babylonia, see Assyriology.
Belief, Religious, Upton, 13.
Beneficence, Negative and Positive, Spencer, Principles of Ethics, II., 31.
Bible, 15.
See also Testament.
Beliefs about, Savage, 25.
For Beginners, Hopp, 20.
Hebrew Texts, 18.
History of Text, Weir, 27.
Plants, Henslow, 19.
Biology, Bastian, 46; Liverpool Marine Biol. Mems., 50; Spencer, 31.
Botany, Bentham and Hooker, 46; Church, 47; Cooke, 47; Grevillea, 49; Jour. of the Linnean Soc., 49; Moore, 51; Prior, 52.
Brain, Cunningham Mems., VII., 48.
Buddha, Buddhism, Davids, 12; Hardy, 35; Oldenberg, 37.
Calculus, Harnack, 49.
Canons of Athanasius, Text & Trans. Soc., 38.
Cardium, Liverpool Marine Biol. Mems., 50.

Celtic, see also Irish.
Stokes, 43; Sullivan, 44.
Heathendom, Rhy, 13.
Ceremonial Institutions, Spencer, Princ. of Sociology, II., 31.
Chaldee, Grammar, Turpie, 38.
Lexicon, Fuerst, 35.
Chemistry, Berzelius, 46; Dittmar, 48; Faraday, 49; Van't Hoff, 49.
Hindu, Ray, 52.
Christ, Life of, Keim, 8.
No Product of Evolution, Henslow, 19.
Study of, Robinson, 24.
Teaching of, Harnack, 6, 11.
The Universal, Beard, 15.
Christianity, Evolution of, Gill, 17.
History of, Baur, 8; Dobschütz, 4; Harnack, 6, 11, 18; Hausrath, 8, 18; Johnson, 20; Mackay, 22; Wernle, 3.
in Talmud, Herford, 19.
Liberal, Riville, 11.
Roots of, Martineau, 22.
Simplest form of, Drummond, 13.
Spread of, Harnack, 5.
What is? Harnack, 6, 11.
Church, Catholic, Renan, 13.
Christian, Baur, 8; Clark, 16; Dobschütz, 4; Hatch, 13; Wernle, 3.
Codex Palatino-Vaticanus, Todd Lectures, III., 44.
Codium, Liverpool Marine Biol. Mems., 51.
Coleoptera, Murray, 51.
Communion of Christian with God, Herrmann, 19.
Comte, Spencer, 32.
Constellations, Primitive, Brown, 56.
Cornish, Stokes, 43.
Creed, Christian Creed, 16.
Crown Theological Library, 10.
Culture, Thoughts on, Smith, 25.
Cunelform, Characters, Smith, 37.
Inscriptions, Schrader, 9.
Daniel, Prince, 23.
Danish Dictionary, Larsen, 42; Rosing, 43.
Darwinism, Schurman, 30.
Denmark, Engelhardt, 57.
Doctrine and Principle, Beeby, 15.
Dogma, History of, Harnack, 5.
of Virgin Birth, Lobstein, 10.
Domestic Institutions, Spencer, Princ. of Sociology, I., 32.
Duck Tribes, Morphology of, Cunningham Mems., VI., 48.
Dutch, Cape, Oordt, 42; Werner, 45.
Dynamics, Cunningham Mems., IV., 48.
Chemical, Van't Hoff, 49.
Ecclesiastes, Taylor, 26.
Ecclesiastical Institutions, Spencer, Princ. of Sociology, III., 31, 32. of Holland, Wicksteed, 28.
Echinus, Liverpool Marine Biol. Mems., 50.

INDEX—continued.

- Economy, Political, Mackenzie, 30.
Education, Herbert, 58; Spencer, 32.
Educational Works, see Special Catalogue.
Egypt, Religion of, Renouf, 13.
Egyptian Antiquities, Sharpe, 37.
 Grammar, Ermann, 35.
English Language, Neglect of, Wyld, 45.
Enoch, Book of, Gill, 17.
Epidemiology, Trans. of Epidemiolog. Soc., 55.
Ethics, and Religion, Martineau, 22.
 Data of, Spencer, Principles of E., I., 31.
 Induction of, Spencer, Principles of E., I., 31.
 Kantian, Schurman, 30.
 of Evolution, Schurman, 30.
 of Individual Life, Spencer, Principles of E., I., 31. of Reason, Laurie, 29.
 Principles of, Spencer, 31.
Ethnology, Cunningham Mems., X., 48.
Evolution, Spencer, 31, 32. of the Idea of God, D'Alviella, 12.
 of Religious Thought, D'Alviella, 15.
Exodus, Hoerning, 19.
Ezekial, Mosheh ben Shesheth, 22.
Faith, Herrmann, 12; Rix, 24; Wimmer, 28.
Ferns, Moore, 51.
Flinders Petrie Papyri, Cunningham Mems., VIII., IX., 48.
Flora of Edinburgh, Sonntag, 54.
French, Boileau, 40; Delbos, 41; Eugène, 41; Hugo, 41, 42; Roget, 43; also Special Education Catalogue.
 Literature, Roget, 43.
 Novels, Army Series, 39.
Fungi, Cooke, 47; Grevillea, 49.
Genera Plantarum, Bentham and Hooker, 46.
Genesis, Hebrew Texts, 18, 35; Wright, C. H. H., 28.
Geography, Ancient, Kiepert, 58.
Geometry, Spencer, W. G., 54.
German, Grammar, Weiss, 44.
 Literature, Nibelungenlied, 42; Phillips, 43.
 Novels, Army Series, 39.
Germany, Marcks, 59.
God, Idea of, D'Alviella, 12.
Gospel, First, Plain Commentary, 23.
 Fourth, Drummond, 17; Taylor, 26.
Gospels, Lost and Hostile, Gould, 18.
 Old and New Certainty, Robinson, 24.
 Testimony, Voysey, 27.
Greek, Modern, Zompoides, 45.
Gymnastics, Medical, Schreiber, 53.
Health, Herbert, 49, 57.
Hebrew, Biblical, Kennedy, 35.
 Language, Delitsch, 34.
 Lexicon, Fuerst, 35.
 Scriptures, Sharpe, 25.
 Synonyms, Kennedy, 35.
 Text of O.T., Weir, 27.
 Text, 18, 35.
Hebrews, History of, Kittel, 6; Peters, 12; Sharpe, 25.
 Religion of, Kuenen, 9; Montefiore, 13.
Heterogenesis, Bastian, 46.
Hibbert Lectures, 12, 13.
Hymns, Jones, 20.
Icelandic, Lilja, 42; Viga Glums Saga, 44.
 Dictionary, Zoega, 45.
 Grammar, Bayldon, 40.
Individualism, Herbert, 57; Spencer, Man v. State, 32.
Irish, Atkinson, 40; Book of Ballymote, 40; Book of Leinster, 41; Hogan, 41; Leabhar Breac, 42; Leabhar na H-Uidhri, 42; O'Grady, 42; Stokes, 43; Todd Lectures, 44; Yellow Book of Lecan, 45.
Isaiah, Dietrich, 34; Hebrew Texts, 18, 35.
Israel, History of, Kittel, 6; Peters, 23; Sharpe, 25.
 Religion of, Kuenen, 9.
 in Egypt, Wright, G. H. B., 28.
Jeremiah, Mosheh ben Shesheth, 22.
Jesus, Life of, Hopps, 20; Keim, 8.
 The Real, Vickers, 27.
 Times of, Hausrath, 8.
 See also Christ.
Job, Book of, Ewald, 8; Hebrew Text, 18, 35; Wright, G. H. B., 28.
 Rabbinical Comment on, Text & Trans. Soc., 38.
Justice, Spencer, Princ. of Ethics, II., 31, 32.
Kant, Schurman, 30.
Kindergarten, Goldammer, 57.
Labour, Harrison, 57; Schloss, 59; Vynne, 60.
Leabhar Breac, 42; Atkinson, 40; Hogan, 41.
Leprosy, Abraham, 46.
Lives of the Saints, Hogan, 41.
Logarithms, Bruhns, 47; Sang, 53; Schroen, 54; Vega, 55.
London Library Catalogue, 57.
Lumbar Curve, Cunningham Mems., II., 48.
Mahabharata, Sørensen, 38.
Malaria, Annett, 46; Boyce, 46; Dutton, 49; Mems. of Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, 51; Ross, 52, 53; Stephens, 55.
Maori, Dictionary, Williams, 45.
 Manual, Maori, 42.
Materialism, Martineau, 22.
Mathematics, Harnack, 49; Spencer, 54.
 See also Logarithms.
Mediæval Thought, Poole, 23.
Mesca Ulad, Todd Lectures, I., 44.
Metaphysics, Laurie, 29.
Mexico, Religions of, Réville, 13.
Micah, Book of, Taylor, 26.
Microscopy, Journal of the Roy. Micro. Soc., 49; Journal of the Quekett Micro. Club, 50.
Midrash, Christianity in, Herford, 19.
Mineral Systems, Chapman, 47.

INDEX—continued.

- Monasticism, Harnack, 18.
Mosquitoes, Mems. of Liverpool School of Trop. Medicine, 51.
Mythology, American, Curtin, 57.
 Greek, Brown, 56; St. Clair, 59.
 Northern, Stephens, 60.
Myxomycetes, Cooke, 47.
Natural Selection, Spencer, 32.
Nautical Terms, Delbos, 41.
Nennius, The Irish, Hogan, 41.
New Guinea, Cunningham Mems., X., 48.
New Testament, see Testament, 26.
New Testament Times, Hausrath, 8, 18.
Nitidularia, Murray, 51.
Norwegian Dictionary, Larsen, 42;
 Rosing, 43.
Ophthalmic Tests, Pray, 52; Snellen, 54.
Origins, Christian, Johnson, 20. of Religion, Hibbert Lectures, 12, 13.
Pali, Dipavamsa, 34; Milanda Panho,
 36; Vinaya Pitakam, 38.
 Handbook, Frankfurter, 35.
 Miscellany, 37.
Paul, St. Baur, 8; Pfleiderer, 9.
Persian Grammar, Platts, 37.
Peru, Religions of, Réville, 13.
Philo Judæus, Drummond, 29.
Philosophy, 29.
 and Experience, Hodgson, 29.
 Jewish Alexandrian, Drummond, 29. of Religion, Pfleiderer, 9.
 Reorganisation of, Hodgson, 29.
 Religion of, Perrin, 23.
 Synthetic, Collins, 29; Spencer, 31.
Phyllotaxis, Churck, 47.
Plague, Boghurst, 46.
Political Institutions, Spencer, Princ. of Sociology, II., 31.
Prayers, Common Prayer, 16; Hopps, 20; Jones, 21; Personal, 23; Sadler, 24; Ten Services, 26; Visard,
 27; Voysey, 27.
Prehistoric Man, Avebury, 56; Engel-hardt, 57; Laing, 59; Reliquia Aquitana, 57.
Professional Institutions, Spencer, Princ. of Sociology, III., 31.
Profit-sharing, Schloss, 59.
Prophets of O.T., Ewald, 8.
Protestant Faith, Hermann, 12;
 Réville, 11.
Proverbs, Book of, Malan, 22.
Psalms, Hebrew Texts, 18, 35.
 and Canticles, Ten Services, 26.
 Commentary, Ewald, 8.
Psychology, Mind, 30; Scripture, 30;
 Wundt, 33.
 of Belief, Pikler, 30.
 Principles of, Spencer, 31.
Reconciliation, Henslow, 19.
Reformation, Beard, 12.
Religion, Grounds and Principles,
 Wright, 28.
 History of, Kuenen, 9, 13; Réville, 9, 13.
 of Philosophy, Perrin, 23.
 Philosophy of, Pfleiderer, 9.
 Thoughts on, Smith, 25; Wimmer, 11.
 See also Christianity, History of.
- Religions, National and Universal, Kuenen, 21.
 of Authority, Sabatier, 4.
Resurrection, Macan, 22; Marchant, 22.
Reviews and Periodical Publications, 61.
Rigveda, Wallis, 38.
Rome, Renan, 13.
Runes, Kermode, 58; Stephens, 60.
Ruth, Wright, C. H. H., 28.
Sanitation, in Cape Coast Town, Taylor, 55.
 in Para, Notes, 52.
Sanscrit, Abhidhanaratnamala, 34;
 Sørensen, 38.
Self-Aid, in War, Caverhill, 47.
Sermons, Beard, 15; Broadbent, 16;
 Hopps, 20; Martyn, 22.
Services, Common Prayer, 16; Jones, 21;
 Ten Services, 26.
Silva Gadelica, O'Grady, 42.
Social Dynamics, Machensie, 30.
 Statics, Spencer, 32.
Sociology, Descriptive, Spencer, 32.
 Principles of, Spencer, 31.
 Study of, Spencer, 32.
Solomon, Song of, Réville, 24.
South Place Ethical Society, Conway,
 16.
Spanish Dictionary, Velasquez, 44.
Spinal Cord, Bruce, 46.
Sternum, Paterson, 52.
Storms, Piddington, 52.
Sun Heat, Cunningham Mems., III., 48.
Syriac, Bernstein, 34; Dietrich, 34;
 Nöldeke, 36.
Taal, Afrikaner, Oordt, 42; Werner, 45.
Talmud, Christianity in, Herford, 19.
Tennyson, Elton, 57; Weld, 60.
Testament, New, Commentary, Protestant Commentary, 9.
 Notes on, Sharpe, 25.
 Textual Criticism, Nestle, 7.
 Times, Hausrath, 8, 18.
 See also Gospels.
Testament, Old, Cuneiform Inscriptions,
 Schrader, 9.
 Literature of, Kautsch, 21.
Test Types, Pray, 52; Snellen, 54.
Theism, Voysey, 27.
Theological Translation Library, 3.
Theology, Analysis of, Figg, 17.
 History of, Pfleiderer, 9.
Truth, Search for, Horton, 20.
Trypanosomiasis, Dutton, 48.
Virgil, Henry, 57.
Virgin Birth, Lobstein, 10.
Weissmann, Spencer, 32.
Woman's Labour, *Englishwoman's
 Review*, 57; Harrison, 57; Vynne, 60.
 Suffrage, Blackburn, 56.
Yellow Fever, Durham, 48.
Zoology, Fasciculi Malayenses, 49;
 Journal of the Linnean Soc., 49;
 Liverpool Marine Biology Committee Mems., 50.

Williams & Norgate's Catalogue of Publications.

I. Theology and Religion.

THEOLOGICAL TRANSLATION LIBRARY.

New Series.

A Series of Translations by which the best results of recent Theological Investigations on the Continent, conducted without reference to doctrinal considerations, and with the sole purpose of arriving at the truth, are placed within reach of English readers:

Vols. I.-XII. were edited by the Rev. T. K. Cheyne, M.A., D.D., Oriel Professor of Interpretation in the University of Oxford, Canon of Rochester; and the late Rev. A. B. Bruce, D.D., Professor of Apologetics, Free Church College, Glasgow.

Vol. XIII. was edited by Rev. Allan Menzies, D.D., Professor of Divinity and Biblical Criticism in the University, St Andrews.

Vols. XV. and XVII. are edited by Rev. W. D. Morrison, M.A., LL.D.

The Price per Volume is 10s. 6d.

Subscribers to the Series obtain three volumes for 21s., or 22s. 6d. carriage free, payable before publication of the volumes.

Just issued, Vols. XV. and XVII.

THE BEGINNINGS OF CHRISTIANITY. By Paul Wernle, Professor Extraordinary of Modern Church History at the University of Basel. Revised by the Author, and translated by the Rev. G. A. Bienemann, M.A., and edited, with an Introduction, by the Rev. W. D. Morrison, LL.D.

Vol. I. The Rise of the Religion.

Vol. II. The Development of the Church.

From some of the Reviews of the Work.

Dr. Marcus Dods in the British Weekly—"We cannot recall any work by a foreign theologian which is likely to have a more powerful influence on the thought of this country than Wernle's Beginnings of Christianity. It is well written and well translated; it is earnest, clear, and persuasive, and above all it is well adapted to catch the large class of thinking men who are at present seeking some non-miraculous explanation of Christianity."

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

THEOLOGICAL TRANSLATION LIBRARY—Continued.

"This translation of Prof. Wernle's lectures deserves a very hearty welcome in England. The style is alive and vigorous, the thought suggestive; the whole narrative is admirably clear and simple, popular in the best sense of the term. . . . It may be accepted as a companion volume to Harnack's What is Christianity? as an announcement of a liberal position of slightly differing tendency. It is quite easy and pleasant reading for the ordinary layman who may be desirous of knowing the present position of the more advanced schools, and how much of the traditional theology these are prepared to retain. One could wish that a few more English theologians would attempt a similar apologia for the edification of the perplexed lay mind."—Daily News.

"No English book covers the same ground, or is conceived with the same breadth and sanity; in few works in any language are learning and insight so happily combined."—Edinburgh Review.

"The translation is well done, and the book is full of interest."—Athenaeum.

Just issued, Vol. XVI.

THE RELIGIONS OF AUTHORITY AND THE RELIGION OF THE SPIRIT. By the late Auguste Sabatier, Professor of the University of Paris, Dean of the Protestant Theological Faculty. With a Memoir of the Author by Jean Réville, Professor in the Protestant Theological Faculty of the University of Paris, and a Note by Madame Sabatier.

"Without any exaggeration, this is to be described as a great book, the finest legacy of the author to the Protestant Church of France and to the theological thought of the age. Written in the logical and lucid style which is characteristic of the best French theology, and excellently translated, it is a work which any thoughtful person, whether a professional student or not, might read without difficulty."—Glasgow Herald.

Now ready, Vol. XVIII.

CHRISTIAN LIFE IN THE APOSTOLIC AGE. By Ernst von Dobschütz, D.D., Professor of New Testament Theology in the University of Strassburg.

Prof. Vernon Bartlet, in the Hibbert Journal, says:—"This is an opportune book. . . . It is singularly free from one-sidedness (e.g., any overdoing of the 'enthusiastic' side of the picture), and from straining after novel effects, won by running an idea to extremes. Its author has an attentive eye for most, if not all, of the varied sides and interests of the first generations of Christians, because he has a heart large and deep enough to sympathise with all genuine religion. Nil Christiani a se alienum putat."

"This is a singularly good, complete, and well-thought-out account of the moral state of the Christian communities in the apostolic and post-apostolic age down to Ignatius and Hermas."—Jour. of Theolog. Studies.

"As a whole the volume may be said to represent a sober, comprehensive account of the ethical situation throughout the course of primitive Christianity, from 30 A.D. to 130 A.D."—Expository Times.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

THEOLOGICAL TRANSLATION LIBRARY—Continued.

*In the Press.THE EXPANSION OF CHRISTIANITY IN THE FIRST THREE CENTURIES [Die Mission und Ausbreitung des Christentums in den ersten drei Jahrhunderten]. By Adolf Harnack, Ordinary Professor of Church History in the University, and Fellow of the Royal Academy of the Sciences, Berlin.

"And it is bare justice to say that in the present monograph, the outcome of his preliminary studies in the Berlin Academy's Transactions for 1901, Harnack has once more brilliantly shown his power of combining verve and learning, mastery of salient detail and an outlook upon the broad movements of the period in question. The Ausbreitung forms a sequel and supplement to works like his own Wesen and Weissäcker's Apostolic Age. It is a diagnosis rather than a story, yet an analysis in which eloquent facts lose little or nothing of their eloquence."—Hibbert Journal.

"It is confidently commended to all students of the early Church as a treatise acquaintance with which will from this time on be indispensable. . . . Both for its form and its contents, this must rank as one of Harnack's best works."—American Journal of Theology.

The Earlier Works included in the Library are :—

HISTORY OF DOGMA. By Adolf Harnack, Ordinary Professor of Church History in the University, and Fellow of the Royal Academy of the Sciences, Berlin. Translated from the Third German Edition. Edited by the Rev. Prof. A. B. Bruce, D.D. 7 vols. (New Series, Vols. II., VII., VIII., IX., X., XI., XII.) 8vo, cloth, each 10s. 6d.; half-leather, suitable for presentation, 12s. 6d.

ABBREVIATED LIST OF CONTENTS :—Vol. I. : INTRODUCTORY DIVISION :—I. Prolegomena to the Study of the History of Dogma. II. The Presuppositions of the History of Dogma. DIVISION I.—The Genesis of Ecclesiastical Dogma, or the Genesis of the Catholic Apostolic Dogmatic Theology, and the first Scientific Ecclesiastical System of Doctrine. BOOK I. :—The Preparation. Vol. II. : DIVISION I. BOOK II. :—The Laying of the Foundation.—I. Historical Survey.—I. Fixing and gradual Secularising of Christianity as a Church.—II. Fixing and gradual Hellenising of Christianity as a System of Doctrine. Vol. III. : DIVISION I. BOOK II. :—The Laying of the Foundation—continued. DIVISION II.—The Development of Ecclesiastical Dogma. BOOK I. :—The History of the Development of Dogma as the Doctrine of the God-man on the basis of Natural Theology. A. Presuppositions of Doctrine of Redemption or Natural Theology. B. The Doctrine of Redemption in the Person of the God-man in its historical development. Vol. IV. : DIVISION II. BOOK I. :—The History of the Development of Dogma as the Doctrine of the God-man on the basis of Natural Theology—continued. Vol. V. : DIVISION II. BOOK II. :—Expansion and Remodelling of Dogma into a Doctrine of Sin, Grace, and Means of Grace on the basis of the Church. Vol. VI. : DIVISION II. BOOK II. :—Expansion and Remodelling of Dogma into a Doctrine of Sin, Grace, and Means of Grace on the basis of the Church—continued. Vol. VII. : DIVISION II. BOOK III. :—The Threefold Issue of the History of Dogma.—Full Index.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

THEOLOGICAL TRANSLATION LIBRARY—Continued.

"No work on Church history in recent times has had the influence of Prof. Harnack's History of Dogma."—Times.

"A book which is admitted to be one of the most important theological works of the time."—Daily News.

WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY? Sixteen Lectures delivered in the University of Berlin during the Winter Term, 1899-1900. By Adolf Harnack. Translated by Thomas Bailey Saunders. (New Series, Vol. XIV.) Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. ; half-leather, suitable for presentation, 12s. 6d.

Prof. W. Sanday of Oxford, in the examination of the work, says:—"I may assume that Harnack's book, which has attracted a good deal of attention in this country as in Germany, is by this time well known, and that its merits are recognised—its fresh and vivid descriptions, its breadth of view and skilful selection of points, its frankness, its genuine enthusiasm, its persistent effort to get at the living realities of religion."

"Seldom has a treatise of the sort been at once so suggestive and so stimulating. Seldom have the results of so much learning been brought to bear on the religious problems which address themselves to the modern mind."—Pilot.

"In many respects this is the most notable work of Prof. Harnack. . . . These lectures are most remarkable, both for the historical insight they display and for their elevation of tone and purpose."—Literature.

THE COMMUNION OF THE CHRISTIAN WITH GOD :
A Discussion in Agreement with the View of Luther. By W. Herrmann, Dr. Theol., Professor of Dogmatic Theology in the University of Marburg. Translated from the Second thoroughly revised Edition, with Special Annotations by the Author, by J. Sandys Stanyon, M.A. (New Series, Vol. IV.) 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d.

"It will be seen from what has been said that this book is a very important one. . . . The translation is also exceedingly well done."—Critical Review.

"We trust the book will be widely read, and should advise those who read it to do so twice."—Primitive Methodist Quarterly.

"Instinct with genuine religious feeling; . . . exceedingly interesting and suggestive."—Glasgow Herald.

A HISTORY OF THE HEBREWS. By R. Kittel, Ordinary Professor of Theology in the University of Breslau. In 2 vols. (New Series, Vols. III. and VI.) 8vo, cloth. Each volume, 10s. 6d.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

THEOLOGICAL TRANSLATION LIBRARY—Continued.

Vol. I. Sources of Information and History of the Period up to the Death of Joshua. Translated by John Taylor, D.Lit., M.A.

Vol. II. Sources of Information and History of the Period down to the Babylonian Exile. Translated by Hope W. Hogg, B.D., and E. B. Speirs, D.D.

"It is a sober and earnest reconstruction, for which every earnest student of the Old Testament should be grateful."—Christian World.

"It will be a happy day for pulpit and pew when a well-thumbed copy of the History of the Hebrews is to be found in every manse and parsonage."—Literary World.

"It is a work which cannot fail to attract the attention of thoughtful people in this country."—Pall Mall Gazette.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE TEXTUAL CRITICISM OF THE GREEK NEW TESTAMENT.

By Professor Eberhard Nestle, of Maulbronn. Translated from the Second Edition, with Corrections and Additions by the Author, by William Edie, B.D., and edited, with a Preface, by Allan Menzies, D.D., Professor of Divinity and Biblical Criticism in the University of St. Andrews. (New Series, Vol. XIII.) With eleven reproductions of Texts. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.; half-leather, 12s. 6d.

"We have no living scholar more capable of accomplishing the fascinating task of preparing a complete introduction on the new and acknowledged principles than Prof. Nestle. This book will stand the most rigorous scrutiny; it will surpass the highest expectation."—Expository Times.

"Nothing could be better than Dr. Nestle's account of the materials which New Testament textual criticism has to deal with."—Spectator.

"We know of no book of its size which can be recommended more cordially to the student, alike for general interest and for the clearness of its arrangement. . . . In smoothness of rendering, the translation is one of the best we have come across for a considerable time."—Manchester Guardian.

THE APOSTOLIC AGE.

By Prof. Carl von Weizsäcker. Translated by James Millar, B.D. 2 vols. (New Series, Vols. I. and V.) Demy 8vo, cloth. Each 10s. 6d.

"Weizsäcker is an authority of the very first rank. The present work marks an epoch in New Testament criticism. The English reader is fortunate in having a masterpiece of this kind rendered accessible to him."—Expository Times.

" . . . No student of theology or of the early history of Christianity can afford to leave Weizsäcker's great book unread."—Manchester Guardian.

"In every direction in this work we find the mark of the independent thinker and investigator . . . this remarkable volume . . . this able and learned work. . . ."—Christian World.

"The book itself . . . is of great interest, and the work of the translation has been done in a most satisfactory way."—Critical Review.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

THEOLOGICAL TRANSLATION FUND LIBRARY.

Old Series.

Uniform Price per Volume, 6s.

- BAUR (F. C.). CHURCH HISTORY OF THE FIRST THREE CENTURIES. Translated from the Third German Edition. Edited by Rev. Allan Menzies. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth. 12s.
- PAUL, THE APOSTLE OF JESUS CHRIST, HIS LIFE AND WORK, HIS EPISTLES AND DOCTRINE. A Contribution to a Critical History of Primitive Christianity. Edited by Rev. Allan Menzies. 2nd Edition. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth. 12s.
- BLEEK (F.). LECTURES ON THE APOCALYPSE. Translated. Edited by the Rev. Dr. S. Davidson. 8vo, cloth. 6s.
- EWALD'S (Dr H.) COMMENTARY ON THE PROPHETS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. Translated by the Rev. J. F. Smith. [Vol. I. General Introduction, Yoel, Amos, Hosea, and Zakharya 9-11. Vol. II. Yesaya, Obadya, and Mikah. Vol. III. Nahúm, Ssephanya, Habaqqúq, Zakhârya, Yéremya. Vol. IV. Hezekiel, Yesaya xl.-lxvi. Vol. V. Haggai, Zakharya, Malaki, Jona, Baruc, Daniel, Appendix and Index.] 5 vols. 8vo, cloth. 30s.
- COMMENTARY ON THE PSALMS. Translated by the Rev. E. Johnson, M.A. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth. 12s.
- COMMENTARY ON THE BOOK OF JOB, with Translation. Translated from the German by the Rev. J. Frederick Smith. 8vo, cloth. 6s.
- HAUSRATH (Prof. A.). HISTORY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT TIMES. The Time of Jesus. Translated by the Revs. C. T. Poynting and P. Quenzer. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth. 12s.
- The second portion of this work, "The Times of the Apostles," was issued apart from the Library, but in uniform volumes, see p. 18.
- KEIM'S HISTORY OF JESUS OF NAZARA: Considered in its connection with the National Life of Israel, and related in detail. Translated from the German by Arthur Ransom and the Rev. E. M. Geldart. [Vol. I. Second Edition. Introduction, Survey of Sources, Sacred and Political Groundwork. Religious Groundwork. Vol. II. The Sacred Youth, Self-recognition, Decision. Vol. III. The First Preaching, the Works of THEOLOGICAL TRANSLATION FUND LIBRARY—Continued.

Jesus, the Disciples, and Apostolic Mission. Vol. IV. Conflicts and Disillusions, Strengthened Self-confidence, Last Efforts in Galilee, Signs of the Approaching Fall, Recognition of the Messiah. Vol. V. The Messianic Progress to Jerusalem, the Entry into Jerusalem, the Decisive Struggle, the Farewell, the Last Supper. Vol. VI. The Messianic Death at Jerusalem. Arrest and Pseudo-Trial, the Death on the Cross, Burial and Resurrection, the Messiah's Place in History, Indices.] Complete in 6 vols. 8vo. 36s.

(Vol. I. only to be had when a complete set of the work is ordered.)

KUENEN (Dr. A.). THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL TO THE FALL OF THE JEWISH STATE. By Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor of Theology at the University, Leyden. Translated from the Dutch by A. H. May. 3 vols. 8vo, cloth. 18s.

PFLEIDERER (O.). PAULINISM : A Contribution to the History of Primitive Christian Theology. Translated by E. Peters. 2nd Edition. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth. 12s.

— PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION ON THE BASIS OF ITS HISTORY. (Vols. I. II. History of the Philosophy of Religion from Spinoza to the Present Day ; Vols. III. IV. Genetic-Speculative Philosophy of Religion.) Translated by Prof. Allan Menzies and the Rev. Alex. Stewart. 4 vols. 8vo, cloth. 24s.

RÉVILLE (Dr. A.). PROLEGOMENA OF THE HISTORY OF RELIGIONS. With an Introduction by Prof. F. Max Müller. 8vo, cloth. 6s.

PROTESTANT COMMENTARY ON THE NEW TESTAMENT. With General and Special Introductions. Edited by Profs. P. W. Schmidt and F. von Holzendorff. Translated from the Third German Edition by the Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A. 3 vols. 8vo, cloth. 18s.

SCHRADER (Prof. E.). THE CUNEIFORM INSCRIPTIONS AND THE OLD TESTAMENT. Translated from the Second Enlarged Edition, with Additions by the Author, and an Introduction by the Rev. Owen C. Whitehouse, M.A. 2 vols. (Vol. I. not sold separately.) With a Map. 8vo, cloth. 12s.

ZELLER (Dr. E.). THE CONTENTS AND ORIGIN OF THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES CRITICALLY INVESTIGATED. Preceded by Dr. Fr. Overbeck's Introduction to the Acts of the Apostles from De Wette's Handbook. Translated by Joseph Dare. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth. 12s.

THE CROWN THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY.

Dr. John Watson, of Liverpool: "The Crown Theological Library is rendering valuable service to lay theologians in this country, as well as to ministers."

The volumes are uniform in size (crown octavo) and binding, but the price varies according to the size and importance of the work.

Vol. I. BABEL AND BIBLE. By Dr. Friedrich Delitzsch, Professor of Assyriology in the University of Berlin. Authorised Translation. Edited, with an Introduction, by Rev. C. H. W. Johns. Crown 8vo, with 77 illustrations, cloth. 5s.

These are the two famous Lectures which were delivered before the Deutsche Orient-Gesellschaft in the presence of the German Emperor, and again before the Emperor, Empress, and the Court, and which gave rise to the Babel-Bible controversy. They set forth freshly and temperately the close relation between the results of cuneiform studies and the more familiar facts of the Old Testament, and clearly state the conclusions of European scholarship as to the compilation of the Pentateuch from many different sources, and as to its dependence on Babylonian myths for large portions of its primeval history.

"This interestingly illustrated and well-made version of the Lectures should satisfy both scholars and general readers, though no doubt scholars will know best how to appreciate the high value of its arguments."—Scotsman.

"It is written in an interesting and arresting style, and gives the best account we have seen in short compass of these most important discoveries."—The Weekly Leader.

"It is long since any book on Biblical Archæology could claim to be more deeply interesting to inquiring minds than this volume must be admitted to be by any thoughtful reader. . . . We believe that most readers will be delighted with the book as a description, romantic in its realism, of actual discoveries, and their bearing on the accuracy of the Old Testament statements."—Christian Commonwealth.

Vol. II. THE VIRGIN BIRTH OF CHRIST: An Historical and Critical Essay. By Paul Lobstein, Professor of Dogmatics in the University of Strassburg. Translated by Victor Leuliette, A.K.C., B.ès-L., Paris. Edited, with an Introduction, by W. D. Morrison, LL.D. Crown 8vo. 3s.

"It should be added that Lobstein falls behind no one of those who have refined the tone of modern controversy, that his attitude to those whose views he opposes is considerate, his own purpose constructive for faith, and his tone impressively reverent. Mr Leuliette's translation is in admirably clear and good English."—Hibbert Journal.

"Professor Lobstein handles his theme with a thoroughly reverent spirit, and the book may be recommended to all who are in doubt as to this particular dogma."—Scotsman.

"No one who reads this most scholarly and convincing volume will doubt the sincerity of the Professor's endeavour and aim; and most readers will gratefully own the notable success he has achieved."—St Andrew.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

THE CROWN THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY—Continued.

Vol. III. MY STRUGGLE FOR LIGHT: Confessions of a Preacher. By R. Wimmer, Pastor of Weisweil-am-Rhein in Baden. Crown 8vo, cloth. 3s. 6d.

Dr P. T. Forsyth, Principal of Hackney College.—“A beautiful translation of a beautiful book.”

“It is a book which will appeal to ministers who are anxious to preserve intellectual sincerity, and to thoughtful laymen who are turning over in their mind the deepest problems of religion. The author's spirit throughout the book reminds one of Martineau. The tone and style of the book are admirable.”—Dr John Watson in Christian Commonwealth.

“Well worth translating and adding to the Crown Theological Library. It is a book of beautiful intention and most sincere aspiration.”—Expository Times.

“This is a notable and vital book, full of keen thought and sweet with the fragrance of true piety.”—Week's Survey.

“This is a delightful book, for we have in it, not the result of scholarship, though that is sound and wide, but the faithful record of the victorious struggles of a religious genius with the spectres of a mind which assail every earnest and thoughtful man in this critical age. The book has one of the marks of true greatness—absolute sincerity. The entire courage, simplicity, and clearmindedness with which Wimmer faces the difficulties of modern religious thought enforce our admiration, and win our trust and sympathy.”—Examiner.

Vol. IV. LIBERAL CHRISTIANITY: Its Origin, Nature, and Mission. By Jean Réville, Professeur adjoint à la Faculté de Théologie Protestante de l'Université de Paris. Translated and edited by Victor Leuliette, A.K.C., B.-ès-L. Crown 8vo, cloth. 4s.

“The book is a powerful, lucid and interesting restatement of the position of Protestantism in regard to modern advances in philosophy and science.”—Scotsman.

“We commend the book for its lucid style, vigorous reasoning, and spiritual aims.”—Christian Commonwealth.

“Admirably translated and edited by Victor Leuliette; is a book which will be of great value to all who are interested in the history of religious development.”—St Andrew.

“An honest and earnest effort to vindicate the eternal place of religion in the life of man, and deserves all respect.”—Week's Survey.

Vol. V. WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY? By Adolf Harnack, Professor of Church History in the University, Berlin. Translated by Thomas Bailey Saunders. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Prof. W. Sanday, of Oxford, in an examination of the work, says:—“I may assume that Harnack's book, which has attracted a good deal of attention in this country as in Germany, is by this time well known, and that its merits are recognised—its fresh and vivid descriptions, its breadth of view and skilful selection of points, its frankness, its genuine enthusiasm, its persistent effort to get at the living realities of religion.”

“In many respects this is the most notable work of Prof. Harnack. . . . These lectures are most remarkable, both for the historical insight they display and for their elevation of tone and purpose.”—Literature.

THE CROWN THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY—Continued.

Vol. VI. FAITH AND MORALS. By W. Herrmann, Professor of Systematic Theology at the University of Marburg; Author of "The Communion of the Christian with God." Crown 8vo, cloth. 5s.

"Not often are English readers presented with so thorough and penetrating an examination of all that is involved in Romanism, and in proportion as Dr. Herrmann's really philosophical method is adopted, Protestantism will find more consistent and convincing advocacy."—Christian World.

"A cordial welcome will be given the very readable translation by Mr. Matheson and Mr. Stewart."—Spectator.

Vol. VII. EARLY HEBREW STORY. A Study of the Origin, the Value, and the Historical Background of the Legends of Israel. By John P. Peters, D.D., Rector of St. Michael's Church, New York; author of "Nippur, or Explorations and Adventures on the Euphrates." Crown 8vo, cloth. 5s.

The six lectures which constitute this book were originally delivered as Bond Lectures before the Bangor Theological Seminary in Bangor, Me., U.S.A. The following is an extract from a minute adopted by the Faculty of that Institution: "The broad and ripe scholarship, the fresh knowledge of details, the constructive temper, and the reverent Christian spirit which were always manifest, gave these lectures exceptional worth, not only for the student body, but for the large company of thoughtful people who heard them."

"It should appeal in a peculiar manner to everybody who takes an intelligent interest in the Bible, the early history of the world, and the development of religion."—Outlook.

Among the works in preparation, the following may be mentioned as in the printers' hands:—

Crown 8vo, about 250 pages, probably 5s.

Vol. VIII. BIBLE PROBLEMS AND THE NEW MATERIALS FOR THEIR SOLUTION. A Plea for Thoroughness of Investigation addressed to Churchmen and Scholars. By Rev. T. K. Cheyne, M.A., D.D., Oriel Professor of Interpretation in the University of Oxford, and Canon of Rochester.

Vol. IX. THE DOCTRINE OF THE ATONEMENT AND ITS HISTORICAL EVOLUTION, and RELIGION AND MODERN CULTURE. By the late Auguste Sabatier, Prof. of the University of Paris, and Dean of the Protestant Theological Faculty. Translated by Victor Leuliette, B.-ès-L. (Paris), A.K.C.

Also,

THE EARLY CHRISTIAN CONCEPTION OF CHRIST: Its Value and Significance in the History of Religion. By Otto Pfeleiderer, D.D., Professor of Practical Theology in the University, Berlin.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES.

Library Edition, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. per volume. Cheap Popular Edition, 3s. 6d. per volume.

ALVIELLA (Count GOBLET D'). EVOLUTION OF THE IDEA OF GOD, ACCORDING TO ANTHROPOLOGY AND HISTORY. Translated by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed. (Hibbert Lectures, 1891.) Cloth. 10s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 3s. 6d.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES—Continued.

- BEARD (Rev. Dr. C.). LECTURES ON THE REFORMATION OF THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY IN ITS RELATION TO MODERN THOUGHT AND KNOWLEDGE. (Hibbert Lectures, 1883.) 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 3rd Edition, 3s. 6d.
- DAVIDS (T. W. RHYS). LECTURES ON SOME POINTS IN THE HISTORY OF INDIAN BUDDHISM. (Hib. Lec., 1881.) 2nd Ed. 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d. Cheap Ed., 3s. 6d.
- DRUMMOND (Dr.) VIA, VERITAS, VITA. Lectures on Christianity in its most Simple and Intelligible Form. (The Hibbert Lectures, 1894.) 10s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 3s. 6d.
- HATCH (Rev. Dr.). LECTURES ON THE INFLUENCE OF GREEK IDEAS AND USAGES UPON THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH. Edited by Dr. Fairbairn. (Hibbert Lectures, 1888.) 3rd Edition. 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 3s. 6d.
- KUENEN (Dr. A.). LECTURES ON NATIONAL RELIGIONS AND UNIVERSAL RELIGION. (The Hibbert Lectures, 1882.) 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 3s. 6d.
- MONTEFIORE (C. G.). ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF RELIGION AS ILLUSTRATED BY THE RELIGION OF THE ANCIENT HEBREWS. (The Hibbert Lectures, 1892.) 2nd Edition. 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 3s. 6d.
- PFLEIDERER (Dr. O.). LECTURES ON THE INFLUENCE OF THE APOSTLE PAUL ON THE DEVELOPMENT OF CHRISTIANITY. Translated by the Rev. J. Frederick Smith. (Hibbert Lectures, 1885.) 2nd Edition. 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 3s. 6d.
- RENAN (E.). ON THE INFLUENCE OF THE INSTITUTIONS, THOUGHT, AND CULTURE OF ROME ON CHRISTIANITY AND THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH. Translated by the Rev. Charles Beard. (Hibbert Lectures, 1880.) 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 3rd Edition, 3s. 6d.
- RENOUF (P. LE PAGE). ON THE RELIGION OF ANCIENT EGYPT. (Hibbert Lectures, 1879.) 3rd Edition. 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 3s. 6d.
- RHYS (Prof. J.). ON THE ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF RELIGION AS ILLUSTRATED BY CELTIC HEATHENDOM. (Hibbert Lectures, 1886.) 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 3s. 6d.
- RÉVILLE (Dr. A.). ON THE NATIVE RELIGIONS OF MEXICO AND PERU. Translated by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed. (Hibbert Lectures, 1884.) 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 3s. 6d.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES—Continued.

- SAYCE (Prof. A. H.). ON THE RELIGION OF ANCIENT ASSYRIA AND BABYLONIA. 4th Edition. (Hibbert Lectures, 1887.) 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 3s. 6d.
- UPTON (Rev. C. B.). ON THE BASES OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF. (Hibbert Lectures, 1893.) Demy 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 3s. 6d.

SYSTEMATICALLY ARRANGED.

Comparative Religions.

- RENOUF (P. LE PAGE). ON THE RELIGION OF ANCIENT EGYPT.
- RHYS DAVIDS (Prof. T. W.). ON INDIAN BUDDHISM.
- RÉVILLE (Prof. A.). ON THE ANCIENT RELIGIONS OF MEXICO AND PERU.
- RHYS (Prof. J.). CELTIC HEATHENDOM.
- SAYCE (Prof. A. H.). ON THE RELIGION OF ANCIENT ASSYRIA AND BABYLONIA.

Philosophy of Religions.

- KUENEN (Prof. A.). NATIONAL RELIGIONS AND UNIVERSAL RELIGION.
- D'ALVIELLA (Count G.). ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF THE IDEA OF GOD.

History of Religions.

- RENAN (E.). THE INFLUENCE OF THE INSTITUTIONS, THOUGHT, AND CULTURE OF ROME ON CHRISTIANITY, AND THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.
- BEARD (C.). THE REFORMATION IN ITS RELATION TO MODERN THOUGHT AND KNOWLEDGE.
- PFLEIDERER (Prof. O.). THE INFLUENCE OF THE APOSTLE PAUL ON THE DEVELOPMENT OF CHRISTIANITY.
- HATCH (Dr. E.). INFLUENCE OF GREEK IDEAS AND USAGES UPON THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.
- MONTEFIORE (C. G.). ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF RELIGION AS ILLUSTRATED BY THE RELIGION OF THE ANCIENT HEBREWS.

Christianity and Present-Day Problems.

- UPTON (Prof. C. B.). THE BASES OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF.
- DRUMMOND (Principal JAS.). VIA, VERITAS, VITA.

ALPHABETICAL LIST.

- ALLIN (Rev. THOS.). UNIVERSALISM ASSERTED AS THE HOPE OF THE GOSPEL ON THE AUTHORITY OF REASON, THE FATHERS, AND HOLY SCRIPTURE. With a Preface by Edna Lyall, and a Letter from Canon Wilberforce. 8vo, cloth. Sewed, 1s. 6d. net.; cloth, 2s. 6d. net.
- ALVIELLA (Count GOBLET D'). THE CONTEMPORARY EVOLUTION OF RELIGIOUS THOUGHT IN ENGLAND, AMERICA, AND INDIA. Translated from the French by the Rev. J. Moden. 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d.
- EVOLUTION OF THE IDEA OF GOD. See The Hibbert Lectures, p. 12.
- ANNOTATED CATECHISM. A Manual of Natural Religion and Morality, with many practical details. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth. 1s.
- BARNABAS' EPISTLE. In Greek, from the Sinaitic Manuscript of the Bible, with a Translation by S. Sharpe. Crown 8vo, cloth. 2s. 6d.
- BAUR (F. C.). CHURCH HISTORY OF THE FIRST THREE CENTURIES. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 8.
- PAUL, THE APOSTLE OF JESUS CHRIST. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 8.
- BEARD (Rev. Dr. C.). THE UNIVERSAL CHRIST, AND OTHER SERMONS. Crown 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d.
- LECTURES ON THE REFORMATION OF THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY IN ITS RELATION TO MODERN THOUGHT AND KNOWLEDGE. See The Hibbert Lectures, p. 12.
- BEEBY (Rev. C. E., B.D., Author of "Creed and Life"). DOCTRINE AND PRINCIPLES. Popular Lectures on Primary Questions. Demy 8vo, cloth. 4s. 6d.
- BIBLE. Translated by Samuel Sharpe, being a Revision of the Authorised English Version. 6th Edition of the Old, 10th Edition of the New Testament. 8vo, roan. 5s. See also Testament.
- BLEEK (F.). LECTURES ON THE APOCALYPSE. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 8.

ALPHABETICAL LIST—Continued.

- BROADBENT (The late Rev. T. P., B.A.). THIRTEEN SERMONS, AN ESSAY, AND A FRAGMENT. With a Prefatory Note by Rev. Prof. J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth. 4s. net.
- CAMPBELL (Rev. Canon COLIN). FIRST THREE GOSPELS IN GREEK. See Testament, New, p. 26.
- CHANNING'S COMPLETE WORKS. Including "The Perfect Life," with a Memoir. Centennial Edition. 4to Edition. Cloth. 7s. 6d.
- CHRISTIAN CREED (OUR). 2nd and greatly Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth. 3s. 6d.
- CLARK (ARCHD. JAS.). DE SUCCESSIONE APOSTOLICA NEC NON MISSIONE ET JURISDICTIONE HIERARCHIÆ ANGLICANÆ ET CATHOLICÆ. 8vo. (Georgetown, Guiana.) Cloth. 21s.
- SEVEN AGES OF THE CHURGH ; or, Exposition of the Apocalypse. Sewed. 1s.
- COMMON PRAYER FOR CHRISTIAN WORSHIP: in Ten Services for Morning and Evening. 32mo, cloth. 1s. 6d. Also in 8vo, cloth. 3s.
- CONWAY (MONCURE D.). CENTENARY HISTORY OF THE SOUTH PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY. With numerous Portraits, a facsimile of the original MS. of the hymn, "Nearer, my God, to Thee," and Appendices. Crown 8vo, half vellum, paper sides. 5s.
- CRITICAL REVIEW OF THEOLOGICAL AND PHILOSOPHICAL LITERATURE. Edited by Principal S. D. F. Salmond, F.E.I.S. Published bi-monthly. 1s. 6d. net.; 8s. 6d. per annum, post free.
- DAVIDS (T. W. RHYS). LECTURES ON SOME POINTS IN THE HISTORY OF INDIAN BUDDHISM. See The Hibbert Lectures, p. 12.
- DELITZSCH (F.). BABEL AND BIBLE. Two Lectures delivered before the Deutsche Orient-Gesellschaft in the presence of the German Emperor. See Crown Theological Library, p. 10. See also Harnack, A., "Letter to Preuss. Jahrbücher," p. 18.
- DOBSCHÜTZ (E. VON). CHRISTIAN LIFE IN THE APOSTOLIC AGE. See Theological Translation Library, New Series, p. 4.

ALPHABETICAL LIST—Continued.

DRIVER (S. R.). See Mosheh ben Shesheth, p. 22.

DRUMMOND (JAMES, M.A., LL.D., Hon. Litt.D., Principal of Manchester College, Oxford). AN INQUIRY INTO THE CHARACTER AND AUTHORSHIP OF THE FOURTH GOSPEL. Demy 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d.

"This is a valuable book, the work of a liberal theologian of distinction and great influence."—Rev. R. J. CAMPBELL, in Christian Commonwealth.

"The book is not only learned, but also reverent and spiritual in tone, and ought to find its way into the libraries of students of all shades of belief, as a very notable attempt to solve one of the most important of New Testament problems."—Christian World.

"Of the spirit in which Dr. Drummond approaches the study of this work of a master mind, of the completeness and arrangement of the material, and of the temper in which the argument is conducted, it is impossible to speak too highly."—Scotsman.

— VIA, VERITAS, VITA. See The Hibbert Lectures, p. 13.

— PHILO JUDÆUS. See p. 29.

ECHOES OF HOLY THOUGHTS: Arranged as Private Meditations before a First Communion. 2nd Edition, with a Preface by Rev. J. Hamilton Thom. Printed with red lines. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 1s.

EWALD (H.). COMMENTARY ON THE PROPHETS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 8.

— COMMENTARY ON THE PSALMS. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 8.

— COMMENTARY ON THE BOOK OF JOB. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 8.

FIGG (E. G.). ANALYSIS OF THEOLOGY, NATURAL AND REVEALED. Crown 8vo, cloth. 6s.

FOUR GOSPELS (THE) AS HISTORICAL RECORDS. 8vo, cloth. 15s.

GILL (C.). THE EVOLUTION OF CHRISTIANITY. By Charles Gill. 2nd Edition. With Dissertations in answer to Criticism. 8vo, cloth. 12s.

— THE BOOK OF ENOCH THE PROPHET. Translated from an Ethiopic MS. in the Bodleian Library, by the late Richard Laurence, LL.D., Archbishop of Cashel. The Text corrected from his latest Notes by Charles Gill. Re-issue, 8vo, cloth. 5s.

ALPHABETICAL LIST—Continued.

GOULD (Rev. S. BARING). LOST AND HOSTILE GOSPELS. An Account of the Toledoth Jeshu, two Hebrew Gospels circulating in the Middle Ages, and Extant Fragments of the Gospels of the first Three Centuries of Petrine and Pauline Origin. Crown 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d.

HARNACK (ADOLF). MONASTICISM: Its Ideals and History; and THE CONFESSIONS OF ST. AUGUSTINE. Two Lectures by Adolf Harnack. Translated into English by E. E. Kellett, M.A., and F. H. Marseille, Ph.D., M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth. 4s.

"The lectures impart to these old subjects a new and vivid interest which cannot but win this faithful version many admiring readers."—Scotsman.

"One might read all the ponderous volumes of Montalembert without obtaining so clear a view or so rare a judgment of this immense subject as are offered in these luminous pages. . . . The translation is excellent, and gives us Harnack in pure and vigorous English."—Christian World.

— LETTER to the "Preussische Jahrbücher" on the German Emperor's Criticism of Prof. Delitzsch's Lectures on "Babel and Bible." Translated into English by Thomas Bailey Saunders. 6d. net.

— HISTORY OF DOGMA. See Theological Translation Library, New Series, p. 5.

— WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY? See Theological Translation Library, New Series, p. 6. Also Crown Theological Library, p. 11. See Saunders (T. B.), "Professor Harnack and his Oxford Critics," p. 25.

— EXPANSION OF CHRISTIANITY IN THE FIRST THREE CENTURIES. See Theological Translation Library, p. 5.

HATCH (Rev. Dr.). LECTURES ON THE INFLUENCE OF GREEK IDEAS AND USAGES UPON THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH. See The Hibbert Lectures, p. 13.

HAUSRATH (Prof. A.). HISTORY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT TIMES. The Time of the Apostles. Translated by Leonard Huxley. With a Preface by Mrs Humphry Ward. 4 vols. 8vo, cloth. 42s. (Uniform with the Theological Translation Library, Old Series.)

— NEW TESTAMENT TIMES. The Times of Jesus. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 8.

HEBREW TEXTS, in large type for Classes:

Genesis. 2nd Edition. 16mo, cloth. 1s. 6d.

Psalms. 16mo, cloth. 1s.

Isaiah. 16mo, cloth. 1s.

Job. 16mo, cloth. 1s.

ALPHABETICAL LIST—Continued.

HENSLOW (Rev. G.). THE ARGUMENT OF ADAPTATION; or, Natural Theology reconsidered. 8vo, cloth. 1s.

— SPIRITUAL TEACHINGS OF BIBLE PLANTS; or, The Garden of God. 8vo, cloth. 1s.

— THE AT-ONE-MENT; or, The Gospel of Reconciliation. 8vo, cloth. 1s.

— CHRIST NO PRODUCT OF EVOLUTION. 8vo, cloth. 1s.

HERFORD (R. TRAVERS, B.A.). CHRISTIANITY IN TALMUD AND MIDRASH. Demy 8vo, cloth. 18s. net.

CONTENTS:—Introduction. Division I. Passages from the Rabbinical Literature: A. Passages relating to Jesus. B. Passages relating to Minim, Minuth. Division II. General Results. Appendix containing the Original Texts of the Passages translated. Indices.

“His book (if he is right in his identification of the Minim) is a history of Judaizing Christianity—the first independent and competent history written in English.”—Expository Times.

“It must become at once the standard authority on its subject.”—Manchester Guardian.

“It is no exaggeration to say that it will prove indispensable not only to scholars interested in Talmudic literature, but to all who study the subject of the evangelical tradition. It will introduce the reader into a new world—that of Jewish thought in the centuries after Christ.”—Cambridge Review.

HERRMANN (W.). THE COMMUNION OF THE CHRISTIAN WITH GOD. See Theological Translation Library, New Series, p. 6.

— FAITH AND MORALS. See Crown Theological Library, p. 12.

HIBBERT JOURNAL: A Quarterly Review of Religion, Theology, and Philosophy. Edited by L. P. Jacks and G. Dawes Hicks. Vol. I. Royal 8vo, 856 pp. Vol. II. 864 pp. Cloth. Each 12s. 6d. net. Annual Subscription, 10s. post free.

HOERNING (Dr. R.). THE KARAITE MSS., BRITISH MUSEUM. The Karaite Exodus (i. to viii. 5) in Forty-two Autotype Facsimiles, with a Transcription in ordinary Arabic type. Together with Descriptions and Collation of that and five other MSS. of portions of the Hebrew Bible in Arabic characters in the same Collection. Royal 4to, cloth, gilt top. 20s.

ALPHABETICAL LIST—Continued.

- HOPPS (Rev. J. PAGE). PILGRIM SONGS. With two Portraits. 3s
- SERMONS OF SYMPATHY. Crown 8vo, cloth. 2s. 6d.
- TWENTY SERMONS FOR OUR DAY. 8vo, cloth. 2s.
- THE BIBLE FOR BEGINNERS. Vol. I. The Old Testament. Crown 8vo, cloth. 2s.
- BIBLE READINGS FOR PUBLIC WORSHIP AND THE HOME (106). 1s. 6d.
- DEATH A DELUSION: with an Account of some Personal Experiences on the Border-land between Sense and Soul. Crown 8vo, cloth. 1s. net.
- PERSONAL PRAYERS. Twenty in number. Bound in grey and gold. 1s.
- THE LIFE OF JESUS. Re-written for Young Disciples. 5th Edition. Richly bound as a gift-book. 1s.
- SPIRIT-LIFE IN GOD THE SPIRIT: A Meditation on God and Immortality. 1s.
- FIRST PRINCIPLES OF RELIGION AND MORALITY. Twenty Lectures, mainly for the Young. 1s.
- SERMONS OF LIFE AND LOVE. Oblong 8vo, cloth gilt. 2s. net.
- HORTON (J.). MY SEARCH FOR TRUTH, AND WHAT I FOUND. Crown 8vo, cloth. 2s. 6d.
- JOHNSON (EDWIN, M.A.). THE RISE OF CHRISTEN-DOM. Demy 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d.
- ANTIQUA MATER: A Study of Christian Origins. Crown 8vo, cloth. 2s. 6d.
- THE RISE OF ENGLISH CULTURE. Demy 8vo, cloth. 15s. net.
- JONES (Rev. R. CROMPTON). HYMNS OF DUTY AND FAITH. Selected and Arranged. 247 pp. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 2nd Edition. 3s. 6d.
- CHANTS, PSALMS, AND CANTICLES. Selected and Pointed for Chanting. 18mo, cloth. 1s. 6d.

ALPHABETICAL LIST—Continued.

JONES (Rev. R. CROMPTON). ANTHEMS. With Indexes and References to the Music. 18mo, cloth. 1s. 3d.

— THE CHANTS AND ANTHEMS. Together in 1 vol., cloth. 2s.

— A BOOK OF PRAYER. In Thirty Orders of Worship, with Additional Prayers and Thanksgivings. 18mo, cloth. 2s. 6d. With Chants, in 1 vol. 18mo, cloth. 3s.

KAUTZSCH (E.). AN OUTLINE OF THE HISTORY OF THE LITERATURE OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. With Chronological Tables for the History of the Israelites, and other Aids to the Explanation of the Old Testament. Reprinted from the "Supplement to the Translation of the Old Testament." By E. Kautzsch, Professor of Theology at the University of Halle. Edited by the Author. Translated by John Taylor, D.Lit., M.A., etc. Demy 8vo, cloth. 6s. 6d.

"This English translation . . . is likely to prove very acceptable to all those students who desire to see for themselves the view taken by the 'higher critics' of the growth of the Old Testament."—The Guardian.

"Dr. Taylor has rendered a great service to the English readers by his excellent translation of this important work."—British Weekly.

"As to matter, it is the work of a scholar who is not afraid of results suggested by fair research, but who never grasps at novelties merely for the sake of originality. In style and language, the book reads more like an original than a translation; an original, too, which in its terseness of expression has escaped the prolix obscurity so commonly complained of in the writings of the author's country."—Church Gazette.

"A brief yet comprehensive statement of critical opinion respecting the order and origin of the Old Testament books."—Methodist Times.

KEIM'S HISTORY OF JESUS OF NAZARA. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 8.

KENNEDY (Rev. JAS.). BIBLICAL HEBREW. See p. 35.

KIRK (R. S.). SIDE-LIGHTS ON GREAT PROBLEMS OF HUMAN INTEREST. Crown 8vo, cloth. 1s.

KITTEL (R.). HISTORY OF THE HEBREWS. See Theological Translation Library, New Series, p. 6.

KUENEN (Dr. A.). LECTURES ON NATIONAL AND UNIVERSAL RELIGIONS. See The Hibbert Lectures, p. 13.

— THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL TO THE FALL OF THE JEWISH STATE. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 9.

ALPHABETICAL LIST—Continued.

LOBSTEIN (P.). THE DOGMA OF THE VIRGIN BIRTH OF CHRIST. See Crown Theological Library, p. 10.

MACAN (R. W.). THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS CHRIST. An Essay in Three Chapters. 8vo, cloth. 5s.

MACKAY (R. W.). SKETCH OF THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF CHRISTIANITY. 8vo, cloth. 6s.

MALAN (Rev. Dr. S. C.). ORIGINAL NOTES ON THE BOOK OF PROVERBS. According to the Authorised Version. Vol. I., Chaps. i to x. 8vo, cloth. 12s. Vol. II., Chaps. xi to xx. 8vo, cloth. 12s. Vol. III., Chaps. xxi. to xxxi. 8vo, cloth. 12s.

— See also p. 36.

MARCHANT (JAMES). THEORIES OF THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS CHRIST. Crown 8vo, stiff covers, 2s. net; superior cloth binding, 3s.

MARTINEAU (Rev. Dr. JAMES). THE RELATION BETWEEN ETHICS AND RELIGION. An Address. 8vo, sewed. 1s.

— MODERN MATERIALISM: ITS ATTITUDE TOWARDS THEOLOGY. A Critique and Defence. 8vo, sewed. 2s. 6d.

MARTINEAU (Prof. RUSSELL). THE ROOTS OF CHRISTIANITY IN MOSAISM. 8vo, sewed. 1s.

MARTYN (Rev. H. J.). FOR CHRIST AND THE TRUTH. 8vo, cloth. 5s. Cheap Edition, cloth, 2s. 6d.

MONTEFIORE (C. G.). ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF RELIGION AS ILLUSTRATED BY THE RELIGION OF THE ANCIENT HEBREWS. See The Hibbert Lectures, p. 13.

MOSHEH BEN SHESHETH'S COMMENTARY ON JEREMIAH AND EZEKIEL. Edited from a Bodleian MS., with a Translation and Notes, by S. R. Driver. 8vo, sewed. 3s.

NESTLE (E.). INTRODUCTION TO THE TEXTUAL CRITICISM OF THE GREEK NEW TESTAMENT. See Theological Translation Library, New Series, p. 7.

ALPHABETICAL LIST—Continued.

PERRIN (R. S.). RELIGION OF PHILOSOPHY (THE); or, The Unification of Knowledge: A Comparison of the Chief Philosophical and Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, cloth. 16s.

PERSONAL AND FAMILY PRAYERS. 8vo, buckram. 1s. net.

PETERS (JOHN P.). EARLY HEBREW STORY. A Study of the Origin, the Value, and the Historical Background of the Legends of Israel. See Crown Theological Library, p. 12.

PFLEIDERER (Dr. O.). LECTURES ON THE INFLUENCE OF THE APOSTLE PAUL ON THE DEVELOPMENT OF CHRISTIANITY. See The Hibbert Lectures, p. 13.

— PAULINISM: A Contribution to the History of Primitive Christianity. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 9.

— PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION ON THE BASIS OF ITS HISTORY. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 9.

PLAIN COMMENTARY ON THE FIRST GOSPEL. By an Agnostic. 8vo, cloth. 14s.

POOLE (REG. LANE). ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE HISTORY OF MEDIÆVAL THOUGHT IN THE DEPARTMENTS OF THEOLOGY AND ECCLESIASTICAL POLITICS. 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d.

PRINCE (J. DYNELEY, Ph.D., Professor of Semitic Languages in the New York University). A CRITICAL COMMENTARY ON THE BOOK OF DANIEL. Designed especially for Students of the English Bible. Demy 8vo, cloth. 9s. net.

PROTESTANT COMMENTARY ON THE NEW TESTAMENT. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 9.

RENAN (E.). ON THE INFLUENCE OF THE INSTITUTIONS, THOUGHT, AND CULTURE OF ROME ON CHRISTIANITY AND THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH. See Hibbert Lectures, p. 13.

ALPHABETICAL LIST—Continued.

RENOUF (P. LE PAGE). ON THE RELIGION OF ANCIENT EGYPT. See Hibbert Lectures, p. 13.

RÉVILLE (A.). THE SONG OF SONGS, Commonly called the Song of Solomon, or the Canticle. Translated from the French. Crown 8vo, cloth. 1s. 6d.

— ON NATIVE RELIGIONS OF MEXICO AND PERU. See Hibbert Lectures, p. 13.

— PROLEGOMENA OF THE HISTORY OF RELIGIONS. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 9.

RÉVILLE (JEAN). LIBERAL CHRISTIANITY. See Crown Theological Library. p. 11.

— See also Sabatier's "Religions of Authority and Religion of the Spirit," p. 4.

RHYS (J.). ON THE ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF RELIGION AS ILLUSTRATED BY CELTIC HEATHENDOM. See Hibbert Lectures, p. 13.

RIX (HERBERT). A DAWNING FAITH; or, The World as a Spiritual Organism. Crown 8vo, cloth. 5s.

ROBINSON (ALEX., M.A., B.D.). A STUDY OF THE SAVIOUR IN THE NEWER LIGHT. 2nd Edition. Revised and partly re-written. Demy 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d.

— OLD AND NEW CERTAINTY OF THE GOSPEL: A Sketch. Crown 8vo, cloth. 2s. 6d.

SABATIER (AUGUSTE). THE RELIGIONS OF AUTHORITY AND THE RELIGION OF THE SPIRIT. With a Memoir by Professor J. Réville. See Theological Translation Library, New Series, p. 4.

SADLER (Rev. Dr.). PRAYERS FOR CHRISTIAN WORSHIP. Crown 8vo, cloth. 3s. 6d.

CLOSET PRAYERS, Original and Compiled. 18mo, cloth. 1s. 6d.

ALPHABETICAL LIST—Continued.

SAUNDERS (T. BAILEY). PROFESSOR HARNACK AND HIS OXFORD CRITICS. Crown 8vo, cloth. 1s. 6d. net.

"It gives thoughtful and acutely reasoned support to the great historical student of Christianity who represents Berlin in theology against the pig-tailed opposition which Oxford has offered to his learning. A spirited piece of controversial writing, it cannot but prove stimulating to readers interested in modern divinity, no matter to which side of the debate their private prepossessions incline them."—Scotsman.

"Mr. Saunders writes with sobriety and with a knowledge of the points at issue. Readers of 'Harnack and his Critics' will do well to read his comments."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

SAVAGE (M. J.). BELIEFS ABOUT THE BIBLE. 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d.

SAYCE (A. H.). ON THE RELIGION OF ANCIENT ASSYRIA AND BABYLONIA. See Hibbert Lectures, p. 13.

SCHRADER (E.). CUNEIFORM INSCRIPTIONS AND THE OLD TESTAMENT. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 9.

SEVERUS (Patriarch of Antioch). THE SIXTH BOOK OF THE SELECTED LETTERS OF SEVERUS, PATRIARCH OF ANTIOCH, in the Syriac Version of Athanasius of Nisibis. Edited and translated by E. W. Brooks. Vol. I. (Text), Part 1, and Vol. II. (Translation), Part 1. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth. 42s. net. Vol. I. (Text), Part 2, and Vol. II. (Translation), Part 2. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth. 42s. net. See Text and Translation Society, p. 38.

SHARPE (SAMUEL). HISTORY OF THE HEBREW NATION AND ITS LITERATURE. With an Appendix on the Hebrew Chronology. 5th Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth. 4s. 6d.

— CRITICAL NOTES ON THE AUTHORISED ENGLISH VERSION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. 2nd Edition. 12mo, cloth. 1s. 6d.

— SHORT NOTES TO ACCOMPANY A REVISED TRANSLATION OF THE HEBREW SCRIPTURES. 12mo, cloth. 1s. 6d.

SMITH (H. W., Compiled by). MODERN THOUGHTS ON RELIGION AND CULTURE. A Collection of the Recorded Beliefs and Aspirations of Leaders of Thought in the Nineteenth Century, especially Illustrating the Transforming Influence of Science on Religion and Morals. 340 pages. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 6s. See also p. 30.

ALPHABETICAL LIST—Continued.

SMITH (MARTIN R.). WHAT I HAVE TAUGHT MY CHILDREN. 2nd Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth. 3s. 6d.

THE STATUTES OF THE APOSTLES. The hitherto unedited Ethiopic and Arabic Texts. Edited, with an Introduction and Translations of the Ethiopic, Arabic, and Coptic Texts, by Rev. G. Horner, M.A. With an Appendix—a recently discovered variant of the Coptic Text.

TAYLER (Rev. JOHN JAMES). AN ATTEMPT TO ASCERTAIN THE CHARACTER OF THE FOURTH GOSPEL, especially in its Relation to the First Three. 2nd Edition. 8vo, cloth. 5s.

TAYLOR (Rev. C.). THE DIRGE OF COHELETH IN ECCLES. XII. DISCUSSED AND LITERALLY INTERPRETED. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

TAYLOR (Rev. Dr. J.). THE MASSORETIC TEXT AND THE ANCIENT VERSIONS ON THE BOOK OF MICAH. Crown 8vo, cloth. 5s.

— See also Kautzsch, "Outline," p. 21.

TEN SERVICES OF PUBLIC PRAYER, with Special Collects. 8vo, cloth, 3s.; or 32mo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

— PSALMS AND CANTICLES. 8vo, cloth. 1s. 6d.

— PSALMS AND CANTICLES, with Anthems. 8vo, cloth. 2s.

TEN SERVICES OF PUBLIC PRAYER, taken in Substance from the Common Prayer for Christian Worship, with a few additional Prayers for particular Days. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.; or 32mo, cloth, 1s.

TESTAMENT, THE NEW. TISCHENDORF (C.). NOVUM TESTAMENTUM GRÆCE. 3 vols. 8vo. 70s. net.

— CAMPBELL (Rev. Canon COLIN, M.A., D.D.). THE FIRST THREE GOSPELS IN GREEK. Arranged in parallel columns. 2nd Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth. 5s. net.

UPTON (C. B.). ON THE BASES OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF. See Hibbert Lectures, p. 13.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

ALPHABETICAL LIST—Continued.

- VICKERS (J.). THE REAL JESUS: a Review of his Life, Character, and Death, from a Jewish Standpoint. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE CRUCIFIXION MYSTERY. Crown 8vo, cloth. 3s. 6d.
- VIZARD (P. E.). PRAYERS, NEW AND OLD. New Edition. Printed at the Chiswick Press. Crown 8vo, buckram. 1s. net.
- VOYSEY (Rev. C.). THE TESTIMONY OF THE FOUR GOSPELS CONCERNING JESUS CHRIST. Crown 8vo, cloth. 3s. 6d.
- THE SLING AND THE STONE. Vol. VII. On Prophecy. 8vo, cloth. 5s. Vol. VIII. On the Lord's Prayer. 8vo, cloth. 3s. 6d. Vol. IX. The Fatherhood of God. Sermon on the Mount, etc. 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d. Vol. X. Revelation tested on Moral Grounds, etc. 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d.
- THEISM: or, The Religion of Common Sense. 8vo, cloth. 2s. 6d.
- THEISM AS A SCIENCE OF NATURAL THEOLOGY AND NATURAL RELIGION. 8vo, cloth. 2s. 6d.
- FAMILY PRAYERS. 8vo, cloth. 1s.
- THEISTIC PRAYER BOOK. 3rd Edition. 12mo, cloth. 3s. 6d.
- WEIR (T. H., B.D.). A SHORT HISTORY OF THE HEBREW TEXT OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By Thomas H. Weir, Assistant to the Professor of Oriental Languages in the University of Glasgow. Crown 8vo, sewed, 5s.; cloth, 6s.
- WEIZSÄCKER (C. von). THE APOSTOLIC AGE. 2 vols. See Theological Translation Library, New Series, p. 7.
- WERNLE (Paul). THE BEGINNINGS OF CHRISTIANITY. 2 vols. 8vo. See Theological Translation Library, New Series, p. 3.

ALPHABETICAL LIST—Continued.

WICKSTEED (Rev. P. H.). THE ECCLESIASTICAL INSTITUTIONS OF HOLLAND, treated with Special Reference to the Position and Prospects of the Modern School of Theology. A Report presented to the Hibbert Trustees, and published by their direction. 8vo, sewed. 1s.

WIMMER (R.). MY STRUGGLE FOR LIGHT, CONFESSIONS OF A PREACHER. See Crown Theological Library, p. 11.

WRIGHT (Rev. C. H. H.). BOOK OF GENESIS IN HEBREW TEXT. With a critically revised Text, various Readings, and Grammatical and Critical Notes. Demy 8vo. 3s. 6d.

— BOOK OF RUTH IN HEBREW TEXT. With a critically revised Text, various Readings, including a new Collation of Twenty-eight Hebrew MSS., and a Grammatical and Critical Commentary; to which is appended the Chaldee Targum. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d.

WRIGHT (G. H. BATESON). THE BOOK OF JOB. A new critically revised Translation, with Essays on Scansion, Date, etc. 8vo, cloth. 6s.

— WAS ISRAEL EVER IN EGYPT? or, a Lost Tradition. By G. H. Bateson Wright, D.D., Queen's College, Oxford; Headmaster Queen's College, Hong-Kong; Author of "A Critical Revised Translation of the Book of Job." 8vo, art linen. 7s. 6d.

ZELLER (E.). CONTENTS AND ORIGIN OF THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 9.

II. Philosophy, Psychology.

BACON (ROGER), THE "OPUS MAJUS" OF. Edited, with Introduction and Analytical Table, by John Henry Bridges, Fellow of Royal College of Physicians, sometime Fellow of Oriol College. Complete in 3 vols., 31s. 6*d.*; Vol. III. sold separately, 7*s.* 6*d.*

BREWSTER (H. B.). THE THEORIES OF ANARCHY AND OF LAW. A Midnight Debate. Crown 8vo, parchment. 5*s.*

— THE PRISON. A Dialogue. Crown 8vo, parchment. 5*s.*

— THE STATUETTE AND THE BACKGROUND. Crown 8vo, parchment. 4*s.*

COLLINS (F. H.). AN EPITOME OF THE SYNTHETIC PHILOSOPHY. By F. Howard Collins. With a Preface by Herbert Spencer. 4th Edition. The Synthetic Philosophy Completed. 8vo, cloth. 21*s.*

DENNYS (EDWARD N.). THE ALPHA; or, The First Mental Principle and Truth-Guide to General Well-Being and Progress: A Revelation but no Mystery. 6th Edition. With a Portrait of the Author. Crown 8vo, cloth. 3*s.* 6*d.*

DRUMMOND (Dr.). PHILO JUDÆUS; or, The Jewish Alexandrian Philosophy in its Development and Completion. By James Drummond, LL.D., Principal of Manchester New College, Oxford. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth. 21*s.*

HALL (LEONARD, M.A.). MAN, THE MICROCOSM. Part I. The Nature of Man. Stiff wrapper. 2*s.* 6*d.*

— THE EVOLUTION OF CONSCIOUSNESS. Demy 8vo, cloth. 3*s.* net.

HODGSON (S. H.). PHILOSOPHY AND EXPERIENCE. An Address delivered before the Aristotelian Society. 8vo, sewed. 2*s.*

— THE REORGANISATION OF PHILOSOPHY. Address. 8vo, sewed. 1*s.*

LAURIE (Professor SIMON). ETHICA: or, The Ethics of Reason. By Scotus Novanticus. 2nd Edition. 8vo, cloth. 6*s.*

— METAPHYSICA NOVA ET VETUSTA: A Return to Dualism. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth. 6*s.*

- MACKENZIE (MALCOLM). SOCIAL AND POLITICAL DYNAMICS. An Exposition of the Function of Money as the measure of Contract, Trade, and Government, viewed from the Principles of Natural Philosophy and Jurisprudence, in refutation of Economic Dogmas. Demy 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d.
- MIND: A Quarterly Review of Psychology and Philosophy. Nos. 1-64. 1876-90. 8vo, each 3s. Vols. III.-XVI. in cloth, each 13s. New Series, Nos. 1-32, each 3s.; 33 and after, 4s. Vols. I.-VIII., each 13s. Vols. IX.-XII., each 17s. Annual Subscription, post free, 12s.
- PIKLER (JUL.). THE PSYCHOLOGY OF THE BELIEF IN OBJECTIVE EXISTENCE. Part I. 8vo, cloth. 4s. 6d.
- PROCEEDINGS OF THE ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY FOR THE SYSTEMATIC STUDY OF PHILOSOPHY. Proceedings. Vol. I., 4 Nos., 1890-91. 8vo, 12s. Discontinued after Vol. III. Part 2. Or each Part separately. Vol. I. No. 1, 2s. 6d.; No. 2, 2s. 6d.; No. 3, Part 1, 1s. 6d.; Part 2, 2s.; No. 4, Part 1, 1s. 6d.; Part 2, 2s. Vol. II. No. 1, Part 1, 1s. 6d.; Part 2, 2s.; No. 2, Part 1, 1s. 6d.; Part 2, 2s.; No. 3, Part 1, 2s.; Part 2, 2s. Vol. III. Part 1, 2s. 6d.; Part 2, 2s. NEW SERIES, Vols. I.-III. Demy 8vo, bound in buckram, each 10s. 6d. net.
- ROBERTSON (G. C.). PHILOSOPHICAL REMAINS OF GEORGE CROOM ROBERTSON, Grote Professor of Mind and Logic, University College, London. With a Memoir. Edited by Alexander Bain, LL.D., Emeritus Professor of Logic, Aberdeen, and T. Whittaker, B.A. (Oxon.). With Portrait. Med. 8vo, cloth. 9s. net.
- SCHURMAN (J. GOULD). KANTIAN ETHICS AND THE ETHICS OF EVOLUTION. 8vo, cloth. 5s.
- THE ETHICAL IMPORT OF DARWINISM. Crown 8vo, cloth. 5s.
- SCRIPTURE (EDWARD W., Ph.D.). STUDIES FROM THE YALE PSYCHOLOGICAL LABORATORY. Vols. I.-VI., each 4s. 2d. net.
- SMITH (H. W.). MODERN THOUGHTS ON LIFE AND CONDUCT. A Collection of above 400 Extracts, designed to bring into prominence the permanent elements which go to make and improve our social life. Selected and compiled by H. W. Smith. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 6s. An Edition, extra gilt, printed on antique paper. 7s. 6d.

SMITH (H. W.). THE GARDEN OF LIFE. Flowers of Thought on Culture, Conduct, and Character for every day in the year, gathered and arranged by H. W. Smith. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt. 5s. net.

SPENCER (HERBERT). AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY. 2 vols. demy 8vo. With Portraits. Green buckram, gilt top. 28s. net.

"It is not too much to say that we close this book, the most interesting, and certainly one of the most important we have ever opened, feeling better, wiser, and humbler for having thus hastily read it."—Academy.

"It is a book for all men and for all time. In its pages the thinker may trace, step by step, the synthesis of synthetic philosophy. Here the poet will find not only a worthy inspiration, but a possibly surprising vein of sympathy. The statesman, the inventor, the litterateur, the man of theory, and the man of practice will find alike, within the covers of these two massive volumes, an almost inexhaustible treasury of interest and constructive thought. There is suggestion and instruction for all the world, and an almost indefinable fascination—whether it be due to the mere intrinsic beauty of the picture itself, or to the dignity of its execution, or to the sense of its almost laborious faithfulness, or to the combined attraction of all three."—St. James's Gazette.

— A SYSTEM OF SYNTHETIC PHILOSOPHY—

Vol. I. First Principles. With an Appendix and a Portrait. Finally revised. New Edition, large crown 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d.

Vols. II. and III. The Principles of Biology. 6th Thousand. 8vo, cloth. Revised and greatly enlarged. Vols. I. and II. 18s. each.

Vols. IV. and V. The Principles of Psychology. 5th Thousand. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth. 36s.

Vol. VI. The Principles of Sociology. Vol. I. Part 1, The Data of Sociology; Part 2, The Inductions of Sociology; Part 3, Domestic Institutions. 4th Thousand, revised and enlarged. 8vo, cloth. 21s.

Vol. VII. The Principles of Sociology. Vol. II. Part 4, Ceremonial Institutions; Part 5, Political Institutions. 3rd Thousand. 8vo, cloth. 18s.

Vol. VIII. The Principles of Sociology. Vol. III. Part 6, Ecclesiastical Institutions; Part 7, Professional Institutions; Part 8, Industrial Institutions. 2nd Thousand. 8vo, cloth. 16s.

Vol. IX. The Principles of Ethics. Vol. I. Part 1, The Data of Ethics; Part 2, The Inductions of Ethics; Part 3, The Ethics of Individual Life. 2nd Thousand. 8vo, cloth. 15s.

Vol. X. The Principles of Ethics. Vol. II. Part 4, Justice; Part 5, Negative Beneficence; Part 6, Positive Beneficence; Appendices. Demy 8vo, cloth. 12s. 6d.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

Also to be had separately :

SPENCER (HERBERT). JUSTICE. Being Part 4 of the Principles of Ethics. 2nd Thousand. 8vo, cloth. 6s.

Other Works.

- THE STUDY OF SOCIOLOGY. Library Edition (21st Thousand), with a Postscript. 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d.
- EDUCATION : Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. 7th Thousand. 8vo, cloth. 6s. The same, cheaper Edition. 41st Thousand. 12mo, cloth. 2s. 6d.
- ESSAYS : Scientific, Political, and Speculative. A new Edition, rearranged, with additional Essays. 3 vols. 8vo, cloth. (Each 10s.) 30s.
- SOCIAL STATICS. Abridged and revised, together with "The Man v. The State." 8vo, cloth. 10s.
- VARIOUS FRAGMENTS. Uniform in Library binding. Demy 8vo, cloth. Enlarged Edition. 6s.
- FACTS AND COMMENTS. Demy 8vo, cloth. 6s.
- THE MAN versus THE STATE. 14th Thousand. Sewed. 1s.
- A REJOINDER TO PROFESSOR WEISMANN. Sewed. 6d.
- REASONS FOR DISSENTING FROM THE PHILOSOPHY OF M. COMTE. Sewed 6d.
- THE INADEQUACY OF NATURAL SELECTION. Sewed. 6d.
- DESCRIPTIVE SOCIOLOGY ; or, Groups of Sociological Facts. Compiled and abstracted by Professor D. Duncan of Madras, Dr. Richard Scheppig, and James Collier. Folio, boards.
 - No. 1. English. 18s.
 - No. 2. Ancient American Races. 16s.
 - No. 3. Lowest Races, Negritto Races, Polynesians. 18s.
 - No. 4. African Races. 16s.
 - No. 5. Asiatic Races. 18s.
 - No. 6. American Races. 18s.
 - No. 7. Hebrews and Phœnicians. 21s.
 - No. 8. The French Civilisation. 30s.

New volumes in preparation.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

- SPENCER (HERBERT). COLLINS (F. H.). AN EPITOME OF THE SYNTHETIC PHILOSOPHY. By F. Howard Collins. Being a Digest of Mr. Herbert Spencer's Works. 4th Edition, the Synthetic Philosophy Completed. With a Preface by Herbert Spencer. 8vo, cloth. 21s.
- DREY (S.). HERBERT SPENCER'S THEORY OF RELIGION AND MORALITY. By Sylvan Drey. 8vo, sewed. 1s.
- A THEORY OF LIFE DEDUCED FROM THE EVOLUTION PHILOSOPHY. Demy 8vo, sewed. 1s.
- THOMPSON (D. G.). HERBERT SPENCER: His Life, Writings, and Philosophy. By Daniel Greenleaf Thompson, Author of "A System of Psychology," "The Problem of Evil," "The Religious Sentiments of the Human Mind," etc. 1s.
- SPINOZA: Four Essays. By Professors Land, Van Vloten, and Kuno Fischer, and by E. Renan. Edited by Professor Knight, of St. Andrews. Crown 8vo, cloth. 5s.
- STUDIES FROM THE YALE PSYCHOLOGICAL LABORATORY. Edited by Professor E. W. Scripture. With many Illustrations. 8vo, sewed. 4s. 2d. each net. Vol. I. 1892-93, 100 pages. Vol. II. 1894, 124 pages. Vol. III. 1895, 110 pages. Vol. IV. 1896, 141 pages. Vol. V. 1897, 105 pages. Vol. VI. 1898, 105 pages.
- WUNDT (WILHELM). OUTLINES OF PSYCHOLOGY. Translated, with the co-operation of the Author, by Charles Hubbard Judd, Ph.D., Instructor in the Wesleyan University. 2nd Enlarged Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth. 8s. net.
-

III. Oriental Languages, Literature, and History.

ABHIDHANARATNAMALA (THE) OF HALĀYUDHA.
A Sanskrit Vocabulary (120 pp.). Edited, with a Sanskrit-English Glossary (180 pp.), by Dr. T. Aufrecht. 8vo, cloth. (Published at 18s.) 10s.

BERNSTEIN and KIRSCH. SYRIAC CHRESTOMATHY AND LEXICON (Chrestomathia Syriaca cum Lexico).
2 vols. in 1. 8vo, cloth boards. 7s. 6d. I. Chrestomathia, separately. Sewed. 3s.

BRÜNNOW. CHRESTOMATHY OF ARABIC PROSE
PIECES. Compiled for use with Socin's Grammar. Crown 8vo, cloth. 8s. 6d

DAVIDS (T. W. RHYS). LECTURES ON SOME POINTS IN THE HISTORY OF INDIAN BUDDHISM. See
The Hibbert Lectures, p. 12.

DELITZSCH (Prof. F.). ASSYRIAN GRAMMAR. With Paradigms, Exercises, Glossary, and Bibliography. Translated by the Rev. Prof. A. R. S. Kennedy. Crown 8vo, cloth. 15s.

— THE HEBREW LANGUAGE VIEWED IN THE LIGHT OF ASSYRIAN RESEARCH. Demy 8vo, cloth. 4s.

— BABEL AND BIBLE. See Crown Theological Library,
p. 10.

DIETRICH (GUSTAV). DIE MASSORAH DER ÖST-LICHEN UND WESTLICHEN SYRER IN IHREN
ANGABEN ZUM PROPHETEN JESAIA nach fünf
Handschriften des British Museum in Verbindung mit zwei Tractaten über Accente. Sewed. 8s. 6d. net.

DĪAPAVAMSA (THE): A Buddhist Historical Record in the Pali Language. Edited, with an English Translation, by Dr.
H. Oldenberg. 8vo, cloth. 21s.

The "Dipavamsa" is the most ancient historical work of the Ceylonese; it contains an account of the ecclesiastical history of the Buddhist Church, of the conversion of the Ceylonese to the Buddhist faith, and of the ancient history of Ceylon.

ERMAN'S EGYPTIAN GRAMMAR. Translated, under Professor Erman's supervision, by J. H. Breasted, Professor of Egyptology in the University of Chicago. Crown 8vo, cloth. 18s.

EVANS (GEORGE). AN ESSAY ON ASSYRIOLOGY. With 4to Tables of Assyrian Inscriptions. 8vo, cloth. 5s.

FAIZULLAH-BHAI (Shaikh, B.D.). A MOSLEM PRESENT. Part I., containing the famous poem of Al-Busaree. With an English Version and Notes. 8vo, cloth. 4s.

— AN ESSAY ON THE PRE-ISLAMITIC ARABIC POETRY, with special reference to the Seven Suspended Poems. 8vo, sewed. 4d.

FLINDERS PETRIE PAPYRI. See Cunningham Memoirs, vols. 8 and 9, p. 48.

FRANKFURTER (Dr. O.). HANDBOOK OF PALI: Being an Elementary Grammar, a Chrestomathy, and a Glossary. 8vo, cloth. 16s.

FUERST (Dr. JUL.). HEBREW AND CHALDEE LEXICON TO THE OLD TESTAMENT. 5th Edition, improved and enlarged. Translated by Rev. Dr. Samuel Davidson. Royal 8vo, cloth. 21s.

HARDY (R. SPENCE). MANUAL OF BUDDHISM IN ITS MODERN DEVELOPMENT. Translated from Singhalese MSS. 2nd Edition, with a complete Index and Glossary. 8vo, cloth. 21s.

HEBREW TEXTS. Large type. 16mo, cloth.

Genesis. (2nd Edition Baer and Delitzsch's Text.) 1s. 6d.

Psalms. 1s.

Job. 1s.

Isaiah. 1s.

INGLIS (Rev. JOHN). ANEITYUMESE AND ENGLISH DICTIONARY. In 2 parts. Also Outlines of Grammar. Crown 8vo, cloth. 6s.

KENNEDY (Rev. JAS.). INTRODUCTION TO BIBLICAL HEBREW, presenting Graduated Instruction in the Language of the Old Testament. By James Kennedy, B.D., Acting Librarian in the New College, and one of the additional Examiners in Divinity at the University, Edinburgh. 8vo, cloth. 12s.

— STUDIES IN HEBREW SYNONYMS. Demy 8vo, cloth. 5s.

KORAN. THE QORAN : with the Commentary of the Iman Aboo Al-Qasin Mahmood Bin O'mar Al-Zamakhshari, entitled "The Kashshaf 'an Haqaiq al-Tanzil." Edited by W. Nassau Lees and Khadim Hosain and Abd al-Hayi. Complete in 6 parts or 2 vols. Royal 4to, sewed. Calcutta. £3 net.

LYALL (C. J., M.A., K.C.I.E.). ANCIENT ARABIAN POETRY, CHIEFLY PRÆ-ISLAMIC. Translations, with an Introduction and Notes. Fcap. 4to, cloth. 10s. 6d.

MACHBEROTH ITHIEL. By Yehuda ben Shelomoh Alcharizi. Edited from the MS. in the Bodleian Library, by Thomas Cheney, M.A. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

MALAN (Rev. Dr. S. C.). THE BOOK OF ADAM AND EVE, also called The Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan. A Book of the early Eastern Church. Translated from the Ethiopic, with Notes from the Kufale, Talmud, Midrashim, and other Eastern Works. 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d.

— NOTES ON THE BOOK OF PROVERBS. See p. 22.

MILANDA PANHO, THE : Being Dialogues between King Milanda and the Buddhist Sage Nāgasena. The Pali Text, edited by V. Trenckner. 440 pp. 8vo, sewed. 21s. See also "Pali Miscellany."

MOSHEH BEN SHESHETH'S COMMENTARY ON JEREMIAH AND EZEKIEL. See p. 22.

MUSS-ARNOLT (W.). A CONCISE DICTIONARY OF THE ASSYRIAN LANGUAGE (Assyrian—English—German). By W. Muss-Arnolt. To be completed in about 15 parts. Parts I. to XIV., each 5s. net.

NOELDEKE (THEODOR, Professor of Semitic Languages in the University of Strassburg). SYRIAC GRAMMAR. Translated from the German by Rev. James A. Crichton, D.D. 18s. net.

— DELECTUS VETERUM CARMINUM ARABICORUM GLOSSARIUM CONFECIT A. MULLER. Crown 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d.

NORRIS (E.). ASSYRIAN DICTIONARY. Intended to further the Study of the Cuneiform Inscriptions of Assyria and Babylonia. Vols. I. to III. 4to, cloth. Each 28s.

- OLDENBERG (Prof. H.). BUDDHA : His Life, his Doctrine, his Order. By Dr. Hermann Oldenberg, Professor at the University of Berlin. Translated by W. Hoey, M.A. 8vo, cloth gilt. 18s.
- PALI MISCELLANY. By V. Trenckner. Part I. The Introductory Part of the Milanda Panho, with an English Translation and Notes. 8vo, sewed. 4s.
- PLATTS (J. T.). A GRAMMAR OF THE PERSIAN LANGUAGE. By John T. Platts, Hon. M.A. (Oxon.), Teacher of Persian in the University of Oxford ; late Inspector of Schools in the Central Provinces of India. Part I. Accidence. Broad crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- RENOUF (P. LE PAGE). LECTURES ON THE RELIGION OF ANCIENT EGYPT. See Hibbert Lectures, p. 13.
- SADI. THE GULISTAN (ROSE GARDEN) OF SHAIK SADI OF SHIRAZ. A new Edition of the Persian Text, with a Vocabulary, by F. Johnson. Square royal 8vo, cloth. 15s.
- SAYCE (Prof. A. H.). LECTURES ON THE RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT BABYLONIA AND SYRIA. See the Hibbert Lectures, p. 13.
- SCHRADER (E.). THE CUNEIFORM INSCRIPTIONS AND THE OLD TESTAMENT. See Theological Translation Library, Old Series, p. 9.
- SHARPE (SAMUEL). EGYPTIAN ANTIQUITIES IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM DESCRIBED. 8vo, cloth. 2s. 6d.
- SHIHĀB AL DIN. FUTŪH AL-HABASHAH ; or, The Conquest of Abyssinia. By Shināb al Din Ahmad B. 'Abd al Kādir B. Sālim B. 'Uthman. Edited, from an Arabic MS., by S. Arthur Strong. Part I. 8vo, sewed. 3s. net.
- SMITH (G.). THE PHONETIC VALUES OF THE CUNEIFORM CHARACTERS. Imperial 8vo, sewed. 2s. 6d.
- SOCIN (Dr. A.). ARABIC GRAMMAR. Paradigms, Literature, Exercises, and Glossary. 2nd Edition. Translated from the 3rd German Edition by the Rev. Prof. A. R. S. Kennedy, D.D. Crown 8vo, cloth. 8s. 6d.
- KEY FOR TRANSLATING THE GERMAN EXERCISES IN ABOVE GRAMMAR. Sewed. 1s. 6d.

SÖRENSEN (S., Ph.D.), Compiled by. AN INDEX TO THE NAMES IN THE MAHABHARATA. With short explanations. Royal 4to, in twelve parts, which are not sold separately, at 7s. 6d. per part net. Part I. just ready.

STATUTES, THE, OF THE APOSTLES. The hitherto unedited Ethiopic and Arabic Texts, with translations of Ethiopic, Arabic, and Coptic Texts, by G. Horner, M.A. See p. 26.

TEXT AND TRANSLATION SOCIETY. Established for the purpose of editing and translating Oriental Texts chiefly preserved in the British Museum.

Volumes already issued—

THE SIXTH BOOK OF THE SELECT LETTERS OF SEVERUS, PATRIARCH OF ANTIOCH, in the Select Version of Athanasius of Nisibis. Edited and translated by E. W. Brooks, M.A. Vol. I. Text, Parts I. and II. Vol. II. Translation, Parts I. and II. 84s. net.

In the Press—

THE CANONS OF ATHANASIUS OF ALEXANDRIA, in Arabic, Ethiopic, and Coptic. Edited and Translated by Prof. W. Riedel (Griefswald) and W. E. Crum.

A RABBINIC COMMENTARY ON THE BOOK OF JOB, contained in a unique MS. at Cambridge. Edited, with Translation and Commentary, by W. Aldis Wright, LL.D.

TURPIE (Dr. D. McC.). MANUAL OF THE CHALDEE LANGUAGE. Containing Grammar of the Biblical Chaldee and of the Targums, and a Chrestomathy, with a Vocabulary. Square 8vo, cloth. 7s.

VINAYA PITAKAM: One of the Principal Buddhist Holy Scriptures. Edited in Pali by Dr. H. Oldenberg. 5 vols, 8vo, cloth. Each 21s.

WALLIS (H. W.). THE COSMOLOGY OF THE RIG-VEDA: An Essay. 8vo, cloth. 5s.

IV. Modern Languages & Literature.

A complete list of Messrs. Williams & Norgate's Educational Publications on Modern Languages may be had on application.

ABBOTSFORD SERIES OF THE SCOTTISH POETS.

Edited by George Eyre-Todd. I. Early Scottish Poetry; II. Mediæval Scottish Poetry; III. Scottish Poetry of the Sixteenth Century. Price of each vol., 3s. 6d.; large paper, 5s. net. IV. Scottish Ballad Poetry. 5s.; large paper, half-morocco, Roxburghe, 7s. 6d. net. V. Scottish Poetry of the Seventeenth Century. 5s.; large paper, half-morocco, Roxburghe, 7s. 6d. net. Vol. VI. Scottish Poetry of the Eighteenth Century. Vol. I. 3s. 6d.; large paper, half-morocco, Roxburghe, 5s. net. Vol. II. cloth, 5s.; large paper, half-morocco, 7s. 6d. net.

ARMY SERIES OF FRENCH AND GERMAN NOVELS.

Edited, with short Notes, by J. T. W. Perowne, M.A.

This series is equally well adapted for general reading, and for those preparing for the Army, Oxford and Cambridge Certificates, and other Examinations—in fact, for all who wish to keep up or improve their French and German. The notes are as concise as possible, with an occasional etymology or illustration to assist the memory. The books selected being by recent or living authors, are adapted for the study of most modern French and German.

LE COUP DE PISTOLET, etc. Prosper Mérimée. 2s. 6d.

"A book more admirably suited to its purpose could not be desired. The Editors deserve to be congratulated."—National Observer.

"The first two volumes are an excellent choice, and we advise any one, whether candidate or lay, to purchase the volume of Mérimée."—Journal of Education.

VAILLANTE. Jacques Vincent. 2s. 6d.

"The books are well got up, and in Vaillante an excellent choice has been made."—Guardian.

"The notes are few and brief, but all are helpful. The story itself is a delightful one."—Scotsman.

AUF VERLORNEM POSTEN AND NAZZARENA DANTI. Johannes v. Dewall. 3s.

"The two stories by Johannes v. Dewall are well suited for their purpose; the style and diction are not too difficult for those whose acquaintance with German is not extensive, and ample explanatory annotation is provided."—Saturday Review.

"Well printed, well bound, and annotated just sufficiently to make the reading of them sure as well as easy."—Educational Times.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

ARMY SERIES—Continued.

CONTES MILITAIRES. A. Daudet. 2s. 6d.

"These stories are mainly culled from a series called Contes du Lundi, originally contributed by their author to the Figaro. Written at fever heat immediately after the great 1870 war, they show Daudet's power in many ways at its highest. . . . We therefore do more than recommend—we urge all readers of French to get the stories in some form, and the present one is both good and cheap. The paper is excellent, and the type clear and bold. . . . A neat map of Paris will assist the reader in following the movement of the stories."—The Schoolmaster.

"The choice is an exceptionally good one, and the notes are excellent."—Guardian.

ERZÄHLUNGEN. E. Höfer. 3s.

"The series has brought fascinating examples of fiction under the eyes of English readers in a neat and handy form. Besides having the military flavour, they are models of style."—Scotsman.

ATKINSON (ROBERT, M.A., LL.D.). THE PASSIONS AND HOMILIES FROM LEABHAR BREAC. With an Introductory Lecture on Irish Lexicography. 958 pp. Todd Lecture Series, Vol. II. 8vo, sewed. Pages 1-34 out of print; pages 35-958, 6s.BAYLDON (Rev. G.). ICELANDIC GRAMMAR. An Elementary Grammar of the Old Norse or Icelandic Language. 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d.BOÏELLE (JAS.). FRENCH COMPOSITION THROUGH LORD MACAULAY'S ENGLISH. Edited, with Notes, Hints, and Introduction, by the late James Boiëlle, B.A. (Univ. Gall.), Officier d'Académie, Senior French Master, Dulwich College, etc., etc. Crown 8vo, cloth. Vol. I. Frederick the Great. 3s. Vol. II. Warren Hastings. 3s. Vol. III. Lord Clive. 3s.

— See Victor Hugo, "Les Misérables" and "Notre Dame."

BOOK OF BALLYMOTE (THE). A Collection of Pieces in the Irish Language, dating from the end of the Fourteenth Century. Now published in Photo-Lithography from the Original Manuscript in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy. With Introduction, Analysis of Contents, and Index, by Robert Atkinson, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Sanskrit and Comparative Philology in the University of Dublin; Secretary of Council, Royal Irish Academy.

The book of Ballymote contains numerous articles of interest to the scholar and to the antiquary. The original portion consists of—Genealogical Lists; Histories and Legends; a fragment of the Brehon Laws; a copy of the Dindsenchas; Treatise on Grammatical Topics, etc. The other portion contains translations from Latin originals: the Destruction of Troy, the Wandering of Ulysses, the Story of the Æneid, and the life of Alexander the Great.

In imperial folio, reproduced by Photo-Lithography. Half-morocco, Roxburghe, cloth sides. £5, 5s. (200 copies only printed.)

BOOK OF LEINSTER (THE), sometime called The Book of Glendalough. A Collection of Pieces in the Irish Language, compiled in part about the middle of the Twelfth Century. From the original MS. in Trinity College, Dublin. With Introduction, Analysis of Contents, and Index, by Robert Atkinson, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Sanskrit and Comparative Philology in the University of Dublin; Secretary of Council, Royal Irish Academy. In imperial folio, on toned paper, with a Photograph of a page of the Original. Half-roan, Roxburghe, cloth sides. £6, 6s. (200 copies only printed.)

DELBOS (L.). NAUTICAL TERMS IN ENGLISH AND FRENCH AND FRENCH AND ENGLISH. With Notes and Tables. For the use of Naval Officers and Naval Cadets. By Leon Delbos, M.A., of H.M.S. Britannia, Dartmouth. 4th Edition, thoroughly revised and considerably enlarged, with additional Plates. Crown 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d. net.

EUGENE'S STUDENT'S COMPARATIVE GRAMMAR OF THE FRENCH LANGUAGE, with an Historical Sketch of the Formation of French. For the use of Public Schools. With Exercises. By G. Eugène-Fasnacht, late French Master, Westminster School. 23rd Edition, thoroughly revised. Square crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.; or separately, Grammar, 3s.; Exercises, 2s. 6d.

GOETHE (W. v.). ANNOTATED TEXTS. See Educational Catalogue.

HOGAN (E.). CATH RUIS NA RIG FOR BOINN. With Preface, Translation, and Indices; also a Treatise on Irish Neuter Substantives, and a Supplement to the Index Vocabulorum of Zeuss's "Grammatica Celtica." Todd Lecture Series, Vol. IV. 8vo, sewed. 3s. 6d.

— THE LATIN LIVES OF THE SAINTS AS AIDS TOWARDS THE TRANSLATION OF IRISH TEXTS AND THE PRODUCTION OF AN IRISH DICTIONARY. By Edmund Hogan, S.J., F.R.U.I., M.R.I.A., Royal Irish Academy's Todd Professor of Celtic Languages. Todd Lecture Series, Vol. V. 2s. 6d.

— THE IRISH NENNIUS FROM L. NA HUIDRE, AND HOMILIES AND LEGENDS FROM L. BREAC. Alphabetical Index of Irish Neuter Substantives. Todd Lecture Series, Vol. VI. 2s. 6d.

HUGO (VICTOR). LES MISÉRABLES: Les Principaux Episodes. Edited, with Life and Notes, by the late J. Boilelle. 2 vols. 6th Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth. Each 3s. 6d.

HUGO (VICTOR). NOTRE DAME DE PARIS. Adapted for the use of Schools and Colleges. By the late J. Bofelle. 2 vols. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth. Each 3s.

LARSEN (A.). DANISH, NORWEGIAN, AND ENGLISH DICTIONARY. Third Revised and Enlarged Edition. 688 pp. Large 8vo, strongly bound, half-roan. 12s. 6d.

LEABHAR BREAC. The "Speckled Book," otherwise styled, "The Great Book of Dun Doighre": a Collection of Pieces in Irish and Latin, transcribed towards the close of the Fourteenth Century. "The oldest and best Irish MS. relating to Church History now preserved" (G. Petrie). Now first published, from the original MS. in the Royal Irish Academy's Library. In imperial folio, on toned paper. In one vol., half-calf, £4. 4s. (200 copies only printed.)

LEABHAR NA H-UIDHRI. A Collection of Pieces in Prose and Verse, in the Irish Language, transcribed about A.D. 1100; the oldest volume now known entirely in the Irish language, and one of the chief surviving native literary monuments—not ecclesiastical—of ancient Ireland; now for the first time published, from the original in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy, with account of the Manuscript, description of its contents, index, and facsimiles in colours. In folio, on toned paper, half-calf. £3. 3s. (200 copies only printed.)

LILJA (The Lily). An Icelandic Religious Poem. By Eystein Asgrimson. Edited, with Translation, Notes, and Glossary, by E. Magnusson. Crown 8vo, cloth extra. 10s. 6d.

MAORI. NEW AND COMPLETE MANUAL OF MAORI CONVERSATIONS. Containing Phrases and Dialogues on a variety of Topics, together with a few general rules of Grammar, and a comprehensive Vocabulary. 4s. net. See also Williams.

NIBELUNGENLIED. "The Fall of the Nibelungens," otherwise "The Book of Kriemhild." An English Translation by W. N. Lettsom. 4th Edition. 8vo, cloth. 5s.

O'GRADY (STANDISH H.). SILVA GADELICA (I.-XXXI.). A Collection of Tales in Irish, with Extracts illustrating Persons and Places. Edited from MSS. and translated. 2 vols. royal 8vo, cloth. 42s. Or separately, Vol. I., Irish Text; and Vol. II., Translation and Notes. Each vol. 21s.

OORDT (J. F. VAN, B.A.). CAPE DUTCH. Phrases and Dialogues, with Translations, preceded by short Grammatical Notes. Crown 8vo, cloth. 2s. 6d. net.

PHILLIPPS (V., B.A.). A SHORT SKETCH OF GERMAN LITERATURE, for Schools. By Vivian Phillipps, B.A., Assistant Master at Fettes College, Edinburgh. 2nd Edition, revised. Pott 8vo, cloth. 1s.

ROGET (F. F.). AN INTRODUCTION TO OLD FRENCH. History, Grammar, Chrestomathy, and Glossary. 2nd Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth. 6s.

— FIRST STEPS IN FRENCH HISTORY, LITERATURE, AND PHILOLOGY. For Candidates for the Scotch Leaving Certificate Examinations, the various Universities Local Examinations, and the Army Examinations. 4th Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth. 5s.

— See also Voltaire.

ROSING (S.). ENGLISH-DANISH DICTIONARY. New Edition. Large 8vo, strongly bound, half-roan. 11s. 6d.

SCHILLER (F. VON). THE BALLADS AND SHORTER POEMS. Translated into English Verse by Gilbert Clark. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 5s.

— ANNOTATED TEXTS. See Educational Catalogue.

STOKES (WHITLEY). OLD IRISH GLOSSARIES. Cormac's Glossary. O'Davoran's Glossary. A Glossary to the Calendar of Oingus the Culdee. Edited, with an Introduction and Index. 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d.

— MIDDLE-BRETON HOURS. Edited, with a Translation and Glossary. 8vo, boards. 8s. 6d.

— THE CREATION OF THE WORLD. A Mystery in Ancient Cornish. Edited, with Translations and Notes. 8vo, cloth. 6s.

— ON THE FELIRE OF OENGUS. Vol. I., Part I. Trans. R.I.A.'s Irish MSS. Series. 4to, sewed. 6s.

— THE LIFE OF ST. MERIASEK. A Cornish Drama. Edited, with Translation and Notes. Royal 8vo. One 8vo facsimile. Cloth. 5s.

— BRETON GLOSSES AT ORLEANS. Edited by W. Stokes. 8vo, sewed. 1s.

— SALTAIR NA RAUN. A Collection of Middle Irish Poems. Edited by W. Stokes. 4to. 4s. 6d.

— OLD IRISH GLOSSES AT WUERZBURG AND CARLSRUHE. Edited by W. Stokes. 8vo, sewed. 3s. 6d.

SULLIVAN (W. K.). CELTIC STUDIES FROM THE GERMAN OF EBEL. With an Introduction on the Roots, Stems, and Derivatives, and on Case-endings of Nouns in the Indo-European Languages. 8vo, cloth. 10s.

TODD LECTURE SERIES (Royal Irish Academy)—

Vol. I. Part. 1. Mesca Ulad; or, The Intoxications of the Ultonians. Irish Text, with Translation and Notes, by W. M. Hennesy. 8vo, sewed. 1s. 6d.

Vol. II. Leabhar Breac, Passions and Homilies from Irish Text, Translation, and Glossary, with Lecture on Irish Lexicography, by Dr. R. Atkinson. 8vo, cloth. Part 1, pages 1-34, out of print. Part 2, pages 35-958, 6s.

Vol. III. The Codex Palatino-Vaticanus. No. 830. Texts, Translations, and Indices, by B. MacCarthy, D.D. 8vo, sewed. 2s. 6d.

Vol. IV. Cath Ruis na Rig for Boinn. With Preface, Translation, Indices, a Treatise on Irish Neuter Substantives, and a Supplement to the Index Vocabulorum of Zeuss's "Grammatica Celtica." By E. Hogan. 8vo, sewed. 3s. 6d.

Vol. V. The Latin Lives of the Saints as aids towards the Translation of Irish Texts and the Production of an Irish Dictionary. By Edmund Hogan, S.J., F.R.U.I., M.R.I.A., Royal Irish Academy's Todd Professor of the Celtic Languages. 2s. 6d.

Vol. VI. The Irish Nennius from L. Na Huidre, and Homilies and Legends from L. Breac. Alphabetical Index of Irish Neuter Substantives. By Edmund Hogan, S.J., F.R.U.I., M.R.I.A., Royal Irish Academy's Todd Professor of the Celtic Languages. 2s. 6d.

VELASQUEZ. LARGER SPANISH DICTIONARY.

Composed from the Dictionaries of the Spanish Academy, Terreros and Salva. Spanish-English and English-Spanish. 1279 pp., triple columns. 2 vols. in 1. Imp. 8vo, cloth. 24s.

VIGA GLUMS SAGA. Translated from the Icelandic, with Notes and an Introduction, by Sir Edmund Head, Bart. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 5s.

WEISSE (T. H.). COMPLETE PRACTICAL GERMAN GRAMMAR, with Exercises, constituting a Method and Reader. 4th Edition, almost entirely rewritten. Crown 8vo, cloth. 6s.

"We have no hesitation in pronouncing this the fullest and most satisfactory German Grammar yet published in England."—Journal of Education.

— SYSTEMATIC CONVERSATIONAL EXERCISES FOR TRANSLATING INTO GERMAN, adapted to his Grammar. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth. (Key, 5s.) 3s. 6d.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

WEISSE (T. H.). A SHORT GUIDE TO GERMAN IDIOMS: being a Collection of the Idioms most in use. With Examination Papers. 3rd Edition. Cloth. 2s.

WERNER'S ELEMENTARY LESSONS IN CAPE DUTCH (AFRIKANDER TAAL). By A. Werner and G. Hunt. 16mo, cloth. 1s. 6d.

"We most cordially recommend this book to anyone going out to settle in South Africa. . . . The dialogues and exercises are admirably planned."—Reformer.

"To those outward bound such a book is sure to be useful."—Practical Teacher.

WILLIAMS (The Right Rev. W. L., D.C.L.). A DICTIONARY OF THE NEW ZEALAND LANGUAGE. 4th Edition. Edited by the Right Rev. Bishop W. L. Williams, with numerous additions and corrections. Demy 8vo, cloth. 12s. 6d.

— LESSONS IN MAORI. 3rd Edition. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

WYLD (HENRY CECIL, B.Litt.). THE NEGLECT OF THE STUDY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. 8vo. 6d.

YELLOW BOOK OF LECAN. A Collection of Pieces (Prose and Verse) in the Irish Language, in part compiled at the end of the Fourteenth Century; now for the first time published from the original Manuscript in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, by the Royal Irish Academy. With Introduction, Analysis of Contents, and Index, by Robert Atkinson. 30 and 468 pp. (Royal Irish Academy's Irish facsimiles.) Large post folio, 1896, half-roan, Roxburghe, cloth sides. £4, 4s.

ZOEGA (G. T.). ENGLISH-ICELANDIC DICTIONARY. 8vo, cloth. 6s. net.

ZOMPOLIDES (Dr. D.). A COURSE OF MODERN GREEK; or, The Greek Language of the Present Day. I. The Elementary Method. Crown 8vo, cloth. 5s.

V. Science.

MEDICINE—CHEMISTRY—BOTANY—ZOOLOGY—MATHEMATICS.

- ABRAHAM (P. S.). LEPROSY: A Review of some Facts and Figures. 8vo. 1s.
- ANNETT (H. E., M.D., D.P.H.), J. EVERETT DUTTON, M.B., B.Ch., and J. H. ELLIOTT, MD., Toronto. REPORT OF THE MALARIA EXPEDITION TO NIGERIA (1900). Part I. Malarial Fever, etc. (Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, Memoir III.). 10s. 6d. Part II. Filariasis (Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, Memoir IV.). Out of print separately, but is contained in the Thompson-Yates Laboratory Reports, Vol. IV., Part I. Price 20s.
- BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.). STUDIES IN HETEROGENESIS. With 825 Illustrations from Photomicrographs. Royal 8vo, cloth. 31s. 6d.
- BENTHAM and HOOKER. GENERA PLANTARUM AD EXEMPLARIA IMPRIMIS IN HERBARIIS KEWENSIBUS SERVATA DEFINITA. Auctoribus G. Bentham et J. D. Hooker. 3 vols., £8, 2s. Vol. I. (not sold separately). Vol. II., 56s. Vol. III. (Parts 1 and 2), 56s.; or separately, Part 1, 24s.; Part 2, 32s.
- BERZELIUS (JÖNS JAKOB) and SCHÖNBEIN (CHRISTIAN FREDERICK). LETTERS, 1836-1847. Edited by George W. A. Kahlbaum. Translated by Francis V. Darbishire and N. V. Sidgwick. Crown 8vo, cloth. 3s.
- BOGHURST (W.). LOIMOGRAPHIA. An Account of the Great Plague of London in the year 1665. By William Boghurst, Apothecary. Now first printed from the B.M. Sloane MS. 349, and edited by Joseph Frank Payne, M.D. 8vo, cloth. 5s. net.
- BOYCE (RUPERT, M.B., F.R.S.). THE ANTI-MALARIA MEASURES AT ISMAILIA. (Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, Memoir XII.) Price 1s.
- BRUCE (ALEX., M.A., M.D., F.R.C.P.E., F.R.S.E.). A TOPOGRAPHICAL ATLAS OF THE SPINAL CORD. Fcap. folio, half-leather. £2, 2s. net.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

BRUHNS. A NEW MANUAL OF LOGARITHMS TO SEVEN PLACES OF DECIMALS. Royal 8vo. Stereotyped. Cloth. 5s. 6d.

CAVERHILL (T. F. S., M.B., F.R.C.P.Ed., Surgeon-Major, The Lothians and Berwickshire Yeomanry Cavalry). SELF-AID IN WAR. With Practical Hints for Cavalry Wounded. With Illustrations and Diagrams. Small 8vo. 1s. net.

CHAPMAN (E. J., Ph.D.). MINERAL SYSTEMS. With Outline of an attempted Classification of Minerals in Natural Groups. Crown 8vo, cloth. 2s. 6d.

CHURCH (A. H.). ON THE RELATION OF PHYLLO-TAXIS TO MECHANICAL LAWS. Part I. Construction by Orthogonal Trajectories, illustrated with 35 Figures. Large 8vo. 3s. 6d. Part II. Assymetry and Symmetry, with 60 Illustrations. Large 8vo. 5s.

CLELAND, MACKAY, YOUNG (Professors). MEMOIRS AND MEMORANDA OF ANATOMY. Vol. I. 16 Plates. 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d.

COOKE (M. C.). MYCOGRAPHIA SEU ICONES FUNGORUM. Figures of Fungi from all parts of the World. Vol. I. (in 6 Parts, each 12s. 6d.). 406 coloured Plates. Royal 8vo, cloth. 80s.

— CONTRIBUTIONS TO MYCOLOGIA BRITANICA. The Myxomycetes of Great Britain. 24 Plates. 8vo, sewed. 5s. net.

— ILLUSTRATIONS OF BRITISH FUNGI (HYMENO-MYCETES). 76 Parts. 1198 coloured Plates. Royal 8vo. Each Part, sewed, 8s. Or in 8 vols. 1198 coloured Plates. Royal 8vo, cloth gilt. £30, 5s. 6d.

— BRITISH FRESH-WATER ALGÆ, exclusive of Desmidiæ and Diatomaceæ. With 130 coloured Plates. Parts 2 to 10. [Part 1 out of print.] 8vo, sewed. 78s.

— BRITISH DESMIDS. A Supplement to "British Fresh-water Algæ." 66 coloured Plates. 8vo, cloth. 52s. 6d.

— HANDBOOK OF AUSTRALIAN FUNGI. With 36 Plates. 8vo, cloth. £2.

— See also "Grevillea."

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

CUNNINGHAM MEMOIRS—

1. Cubic Transformations. By John Casey, LL.D. 4to, sewed. 2s. 6d.
 2. On the Lumbar Curve in Man and the Apes. By D. J. Cunningham, M.D. 13 Plates. 4to, sewed. 5s.
 3. New Researches on Sun-heat, Terrestrial Radiation, etc. By Rev. Samuel Haughton, M.A., M.D. 9 Plates. 4to, sewed. 1s. 6d.
 4. Dynamics and Modern Geometry. A New Chapter in the Theory of Screws. By Sir Robert S. Ball, LL.D. 4to, sewed. 2s.
 5. The Red Stars. Observations and Catalogue. New Edition. Edited by Rev. T. Espin, M.A. 4to, sewed. 3s. 6d.
 6. On the Morphology of the Duck Tribe and the Auk Tribe. By W. K. Parker, F.R.S. 9 Plates. 4to, sewed. 3s. 6d.
 7. Contribution to the Surface Anatomy of the Cerebral Hemispheres. By D. J. Cunningham, M.D. With a Chapter upon Cranio-Cerebral Topography by Victor Horsley, M.B., F.R.S. 4to, sewed. 8s. 6d.
 8. On the Flinders Petrie Papyri. Part I. With Transcriptions, Commentaries, and Index. With 30 Autotypes. 4to, sewed. 42s. net.
 9. On the Flinders Petrie Papyri. Part II. With 18 Autotypes. 4to, sewed. 42s. net. Appendix to 8 and 9. 5s. net.
 10. The Decorative Art of British New Guinea. A Study in Papuan Ethnography. By Alfred C. Haddon, M.A. With 12 Plates, and numerous other Illustrations. 4to, sewed. 14s. net.
- DITTMAR (Prof. W.). CHEMICAL ARITHMETIC.
Part I. A Collection of Tables, Mathematical, Chemical, and Physical, for the use of Chemists, etc. 8vo, cloth. 6s. net.
- EXERCISES IN QUANTITATIVE CHEMICAL ANALYSIS, with a short Treatise on Gas Analysis.
8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d.
- DURHAM (H. E., M.A., M.B., F.R.C.S.), and the late WALTER MYERS, M.B. REPORT OF THE YELLOW FEVER EXPEDITION TO PARA (1900). (Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, Memoir VII.) 4to, 7s. 6d.
- DUTTON (J. E., M.B., Ch.B.). REPORT OF THE MALARIA EXPEDITION TO THE GAMBIA. (Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, Memoir X.) 4to. 10s. 6d. net.
- and JOHN L. TODD, B.A., M.D., C.M., M'Gill. FIRST REPORT OF THE TRYPANOSOMIASIS EXPEDITION TO SENEGAMBIA (1902). (Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, Memoir XI.) 4to. 10s. 6d. net.

FARADAY and SCHÖENBEIN, LETTERS OF, 1836-1862.

With Notes, Comments, and References to Contemporary Letters. Edited by George W. A. Kahlbaum and Francis V. Darbishire, with Portraits of Faraday and Schöenbein in Photogravure. Demy 8vo, cloth. 13s. net.

FASCICULI MALAYENSES. Anthropological and Zoological results of an Expedition to Perak and the Siamese Malay States, 1901-1902, undertaken by Nelson Annandale and Herbert C. Robinson. 4to. Now ready. Anthropology, Part I., 15s. Zoology, Vol. I., Parts I., II., and Appendix. 50s. Supplement (Itinerary), 5s.

GREVILLEA: A Record of Cryptogamic Botany and its Literature. Edited by M. C. Cooke. Parts. 8vo. Each 1s. 6d. Plates. Vols. I.-XVIII. In 9 vols. Cloth (each 14s.). £6, 6s.

GREVILLEA ATLAS. 37 Coloured Plates of Hymenocetal Fungi. Re-issued from "Grevillea." 8vo, sewed. 5s. net.

HANDBOOK OF THE MUSEUM OF HYGIENE, UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL. 8vo. 1s.

HARNACK (AXEL). INTRODUCTION TO THE ELEMENTS OF THE DIFFERENTIAL AND INTEGRAL CALCULUS. From the German. Royal 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

HERBERT (AUBERON) and HAROLD WAGER. BAD AIR AND BAD HEALTH. Crown 8vo, sewed, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

HOFF (J. H. VAN'T). STUDIES IN CHEMICAL DYNAMICS. Revised and enlarged by Dr. Ernst Cohen, Assistant in the Chemical Laboratory of the University of Amsterdam. Translated by Thomas Ewan, M.Sc., Ph.D., Demonstrator of Chemistry in the Yorkshire College, Leeds. Royal 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

JAEGER (GUSTAV, M.D.). PROBLEMS OF NATURE. Selected, edited, and translated by H. G. Schlichter, D.Sc., with a Facsimile of a Letter from Charles Darwin to the Author. Demy 8vo, cloth. 4s.

JOURNAL OF THE LINNEAN SOCIETY. Botany. At various prices. Index to Journal (Botany), 20s. Zoology. At various prices. General Index to the first 20 vols. of the Journal (Zoology) and the Zoological portion of the Proceedings, 20s.

JOURNAL OF THE ROYAL MICROSCOPICAL SOCIETY, containing its transactions and Proceedings, with other Microscopical information. Bi-monthly. Previous to 1893 at various prices; after that date bi-monthly, each 6s. net.

JOURNAL OF THE QUEKETT MICROSCOPICAL CLUB. Nos. 1-26, 1s. net; Nos. 27-31, 2s. 6d. net. 1893, No. 32, and following Nos., half-yearly, 3s. 6d. net.

LIVERPOOL MARINE BIOLOGY COMMITTEE. MEMOIRS ON TYPICAL BRITISH MARINE PLANTS AND ANIMALS. Edited by W. A. Herdman, D.Sc., F.R.S. All demy 8vo, stiff boards.

1. Ascidia. By W. A. Herdman. With 5 Plates. Price 2s. net.
2. Cardium. By J. Johnstone, Fisheries Assistant, University College, Liverpool. With 7 Plates. Price 2s. 6d. net.
3. Echinus. By Herbert Clifton Chadwick, Curator of the Port Erin Biological Station. With 5 Plates. Price 2s. net.
4. Codium. By R. J. Harvey Gibson, M.A., F.L.S., Professor of Botany in University College, Liverpool, and Helen P. Auld, B.Sc., With 3 Plates. Price 1s. 6d. net.
5. Alcyonium. By Sydney J. Hickson, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., Beyer Professor of Zoology in Owens College, Manchester. With 3 Plates. Price 1s. 6d. net.
6. Lepeophtheirus and Lerneæ. By Andrew Scott, Resident Fisheries Assistant at the Peel Hatchery. With 5 Plates. 2s. net.
7. Lineus. By R. C. Punnett, B.A., with 4 Plates. 2s. net.
8. Pleuronectes. By Frank J. Cole, Jesus College, Oxford, Lecturer in the Victoria University, Demonstrator of Zoology, University, Liverpool, and James Johnstone, B.Sc. Lond., Fisheries Assistant, University, Liverpool. With 11 Plates. 7s. net.
9. Chondrus. By Otto V. Darbishire, Owens College, Manchester. With 7 Plates. 2s. 6d. net.
10. Patella (the Common Limpet). By J. R. Ainsworth Davis, M.A., Professor of Zoology in the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth, and H. J. Fleure, B.Sc., Fellow of the University of Wales. With 4 Plates. 2s. 6d. net.
11. Arenicola (the Lug-Worm). By J. H. Ashworth, D.Sc., Lecturer in Invertebrate Zoology in the University of Edinburgh. With 8 Plates. Price 4s. 6d. net.

LIVERPOOL MARINE BIOLOGY COMMITTEE. FIFTH REPORT UPON THE FAUNA OF LIVERPOOL BAY AND THE NEIGHBOURING SEAS. Written by the Members of the Liverpool Marine Biology Committee and other Naturalists; and edited by W. A. Herdman, D.Sc., F.R.S., Professor of Natural History, the University, Liverpool. Demy 8vo, cloth. 12 Plates. 8s. 6d. net.

MEMOIRS OF THE LIVERPOOL SCHOOL OF TROPICAL MEDICINE.

- I. Ross (R.) Malarial Fever: Its Cause, Prevention, and Treatment. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- II. Ross (R.), H. E. Annett, and E. E. Austen. Report of the Malaria Expedition to Sierra Leone (1899). 4to. 21s.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

MEMOIRS OF THE LIVERPOOL SCHOOL OF TROPICAL MEDICINE—Continued.

III. Annett (H. E.), J. E. Dutton, and J. H. Elliott. Report of the Malaria Expedition to Nigeria (1900). I. Malarial Fever. 4to. 10s. 6d.

IV. Annett (H. E.), J. E. Dutton, and J. H. Elliott. Report of the Malaria Expedition to Nigeria (1900). II. Filariasis. 4to. [This is out of print separately, but is also contained in the Report of the Thompson-Yates Laboratories, Vol. IV. Part I. Price 20s.]

V. Ross (R.) and M. L. Taylor. Progress Reports of the Campaign against Mosquitoes in Sierra Leone. Part I. 1901. With a Letter from Dr. Daniels regarding the results arrived at to date. 8vo. 1s. Part II. 1902. 8vo. 1s.

VI. [Not issued yet.]

VII. Durham (H. E.) and W. Myers. Report of the Yellow Fever Expedition to Para (1900). 4to. 7s. 6d.

VIII. Taylor (M. L.). Report on the Sanitary Conditions of Cape Coast Town. 8vo. 1s.

IX. Ross (R.). Report on Malaria at Ismailia and Suez. 8vo. 1s.

X. Dutton (J. E.). Report of the Malaria Expedition to the Gambia. 4to. 10s. 6d. net.

XI. Dutton (J. E.) and J. L. Todd. First Report of the Trypanosomiasis Expedition to Senegambia (1902). 4to. 10s. 6d. net. [Also contained in Thompson-Yates Laboratories Reports, V. 2.]

XII. Boyce (R.). The Anti-Malaria Measures at Ismailia. 8vo. 1s.

LOCKWOOD (Prof. C. B.). HUNTERIAN LECTURES ON THE DEVELOPMENT AND TRANSITION OF THE TESTIS, NORMAL AND ABNORMAL. Three 4to Plates. 8vo, cloth. 5s.

MIERS (J.). ON THE APOCYNACEÆ OF SOUTH AMERICA. With some preliminary Remarks on the whole family. 35 Plates. 4to, cloth. 30s.

MOORE (T.). INDEX FILICUM: A Synopsis of the Genera of Ferns. 20 Parts. 84 Plates. 12mo, sewed. 20s.

MURRAY (ANDREW). LIST OF COLEOPTERA FROM OLD CALABAR, ON THE WEST COAST OF AFRICA, RECEIVED AND DESCRIBED. 8vo, sewed. 8s.

— MONOGRAPH OF THE FAMILY OF NITIDULARIÆ. 5 coloured Plates. 4to, cloth. 10s.

NOTES ON SANITARY CONDITIONS OBTAINING IN PARA. By the Members of the Yellow Fever Expedition. (Published by the Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine.) 1s.

PATERSON (ANDREW MELVILLE, M.D., Derby Professor of Anatomy in the University of Liverpool, Hunterian Professor at the Royal College of Surgeons of England). THE HUMAN STERNUM. Three Lectures delivered at the Royal College of Surgeons, England, November 1903. With 10 Plates. Crown 4to. 10s. net.

PIDDINGTON (HENRY). THE SAILORS' HORN-BOOK FOR THE LAW OF STORMS. Being a Practical Exposition of the Theory of the Law of Storms, and its uses to Mariners of all Classes in all Parts of the World. Shown by transparent Storm Cards and useful Lessons. 7th Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d.

PRAY (Dr.). ASTIGMATIC LETTERS. Printed on Mill-board, size 22 by 14 inches. 1s.

PRIOR. ON THE POPULAR NAMES OF BRITISH PLANTS. Being an Explanation of the Origin and Meaning of the names of our indigenous and most commonly cultivated species. 3rd Edition. Post 8vo. 7s. 6d.

RAY (PRAPHULLA CHANDRA, D.Sc., Professor of Chemistry, Presidency College, Calcutta). A HISTORY OF HINDU CHEMISTRY FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE MIDDLE OF THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY, A.D. With Sanscrit Texts, Variants, Translation, and Illustrations. Vol. I. Royal 8vo, cloth. 12s. 6d. net.

REPORTS OF THE THOMPSON-YATES AND JOHNSTON LABORATORIES. Demy 4to, with Illustrations. Vol. I. 1898-9. 10s. 6d. Vol. II. 1898-9. 25s. Vol. III. Part 1. 1900. 7s. 6d. Vol. III. Part 2. 1901. 12s. 6d. Vol. IV. Part 1. 1901. 20s. Vol. IV. Part 2. 1902. 21s. New Series. Vol. V. Part 1. 1903. Limp, 20s.; cloth, 21s. Vol. V. Part 2. 1903. Limp, 12s. 6d.; cloth, 13s. 6d.

ROSS (RONALD, C.B., F.R.S., etc., Major I.M.S. (retired)). MALARIAL FEVER: Its Cause, Prevention, and Treatment. (Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, Memoir I.) 8vo, cloth. 2s. 6d.

ROSS (RONALD, C.B., F.R.S., etc., Major I.M.S. (retired)), H. E. ANNETT, M.D., D.P.H., and E. E. AUSTEN. REPORT OF THE MALARIA EXPEDITION TO SIERRA LEONE (1899). (Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, Memoir II.) 4to. 21s.

— FIRST PROGRESS REPORT OF THE CAMPAIGN AGAINST MOSQUITOES IN SIERRA LEONE (1901). With a Letter from Dr. Daniels regarding the results arrived at to date. (Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, Memoir V. 1.) 1s.

— SECOND PROGRESS REPORT OF THE CAMPAIGN AGAINST MOSQUITOES IN SIERRA LEONE (1902). By M. Logan Taylor, M.B. (Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, Memoir V. 2.) 1s.

— REPORT ON MALARIA AT ISMAILIA AND SUEZ. (Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, Memoir IX.) 1s.

SANDERS (A., M.R.C.S., F.L.S.). RESEARCHES IN THE NERVOUS SYSTEM OF MYXINE GLUTINOSA. 4to, sewed. 8 Plates, 10s. 6d.

SANG'S LOGARITHMS. A new Table of Seven-place Logarithms of all Numbers continuously up to 200,000. 2nd Edition. Royal 8vo, cloth. 21s.

SCHENBEIN. CORRESPONDENCE WITH FARADAY. See Faraday.

— CORRESPONDENCE WITH BERZELIUS. See Berzelius.

SCHREBER (D. G. M.). MEDICAL INDOOR GYMNAS-TICS, or a System of Hygienic Exercises for Home Use, to be practised anywhere, without apparatus or assistance, by young and old of either sex, for the preservation of health and general activity. Revised and Supplemented by Rudolf Graefe, M.D. With a large plate and 45 illustrations in the text. Royal 8vo, cloth. 3s. net.

"The exercises described, when efficiently used, will undoubtedly be of value in strengthening and developing the muscular system. The descriptions of the exercises and the figures in the text are excellent."—Physician and Surgeon.

"Well worthy of the attention of those who go in for regular physical training as a means for the preservation of health."—Scotsman.

"A very sensible little treatise."—Glasgow Herald.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

SCHROEN (L.). SEVEN-FIGURE LOGARITHMS OF NUMBERS from 1 to 108,000, and of Sines, Cosines, Tangents, Cotangents to every 10 Seconds of the Quadrant. With a Table of Proportional Parts. By Dr. Ludwig Schroen, Director of the Observatory of Gena, etc., etc. 5th Edition, corrected and stereotyped. With a description of the Tables by A. De Morgan, Professor of Mathematics in University College, London. Imp. 8vo, cloth, printed on light green paper. 9s.

SNELLEN'S OPHTHALMIC TEST TYPES. Best Types for the Determination of the Acuteness of Vision. 14th Edition, considerably augmented and improved. 8vo, sewed. 4s. Single Sheets: E T B, M O V, B D E, $\omega \omega \omega$, and Large Clock Sheet. 8d. each. Small Clock Sheet and R T V Z. 4d. each.

— ASTIGMATIC TEST CHART. Long folio, varnished, mounted on rollers. 2s. net.

SONNTAG (C. O.). A POCKET FLORA OF EDINBURGH AND THE SURROUNDING DISTRICT. A Collection and full Description of all Phanerogamic and the principal Cryptogamic Plants, classified after the Natural System, with an artificial Key and a Glossary of Botanical Terms. By the late C. O. Sonntag, the Royal High School, Edinburgh; formerly Secretary of the Microscopical Society of Glasgow, etc. Fcap. 8vo, limp cloth, round corners, with Map of the Environs of Edinburgh. 3s. 6d. net.

SPALTEHOLZ (WERNER, Extraordinary Professor of Anatomy in the University, and Custodian of the Anatomical Museum at Leipzig, with the Advice of Wilhelm His, Professor of Anatomy in the University of Leipzig). HAND-ATLAS OF HUMAN ANATOMY. Translated from the 3rd German Edition by Lewellys F. Barker, Professor of Anatomy in the University of Chicago; with a Preface by Franklin P. Mall, Professor of Anatomy in the Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore. With 935 Illustrations, mostly in colour. Vol. I. Bones, Joints, Ligaments, 14s. 6d. net; Vol. II. Regions, Muscles, Fasciæ, Heart, Blood-vessels, 14s. 6d. net; Vol. III. Viscera, Brain, Nerves, Sense-Organs, 22s. 6d. net.

SPENCER (H.). THE INADEQUACY OF NATURAL SELECTION. See p. 32.

SPENCER (W. G.). INVENTIONAL GEOMETRY. With a Preface by Herbert Spencer. 8vo, cloth. 1s.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

SPENCER (W. G.). A SYSTEM OF LUCID SHORT-HAND. With a Prefatory Note by Herbert Spencer. Cloth. 1s.

STEPHENS (J. W. W., M.D. Cantab., D.P.H.) and S. R. CHRISTOPHERS, M.B. Vict., I.M.S. THE PRACTICAL STUDY OF MALARIA AND OTHER BLOOD PARASITES. (Published by the Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine). 8vo, cloth. 10s. net.

TAYLOR (M. LOGAN, M.B., Ch.B.). REPORT ON THE SANITARY CONDITIONS OF CAPE COAST TOWN. (Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, Memoir VIII.) 8vo. 1s.

— REPORT OF THE CAMPAIGN AGAINST THE MOSQUITOES IN SIERRA LEONE. See Ross and Taylor.

TRANSACTIONS OF THE EPIDEMIOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON. New Series. Vol. XXII. Session 1902-1903. Demy 8vo, cloth. 6s. net. The earlier volumes of the New Series, I.-XXI., are still obtainable. Price 6s. net each. Commemoration Volume, containing an account of the Foundation of the Society and of the Commemoration Dinner, together with an Index of the papers read at its meetings between 1855 and 1900. 8vo, cloth. 5s. net.

TRANSACTIONS OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF EDINBURGH. Vol. XXXVIII. Part 1, 40s. Part 2, 25s. Part 3, 30s. Part 4, 7s. 6d. Vol. XXXIX. Part 1, 30s. Part 2, 19s. Part 3, 43s. Part 4, 9s. Vol. XL. Part 1, 25s. General Index to First Thirty-four Volumes (1783-1888), with History of the Institution. 4to, cloth. 21s.

TRANSACTIONS OF THE ROYAL IRISH ACADEMY, DUBLIN. Vols. I.-XX. 4to. £22, 5s. 6d. Vols. XXI.-XXXI. Various prices.

TRANSACTIONS OF THE ROYAL DUBLIN SOCIETY.
Various volumes at various prices.

VEGA. LOGARITHMIC TABLES OF NUMBERS AND TRIGONOMETRICAL FUNCTIONS. Translated from the 40th, or Dr. Bremiker's Edition, thoroughly revised and enlarged, by W. L. F. Fischer, M.A., F.R.S., Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge; Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of St. Andrews. 75th Stereotyped Edition. Royal 8vo, cloth. 7s.

VI. Miscellaneous.

ANTHROPOLOGY—SOCIOLOGY—MYTHOLOGY—
BIOGRAPHY, ETC.

AVEBURY (Lord, D.C.L., F.R.S., etc.) (Sir John Lubbock). PREHISTORIC TIMES, as illustrated by Ancient Remains and the Manners and Customs of Modern Savages. 6th Edition, revised, with 239 Illustrations, a large number of which are specially prepared for this Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt tops. 18s.

"To anyone who wishes to obtain a succinct conspectus of the present state of knowledge on the subject of early man, we recommend the perusal of this comprehensive volume."—four. Brit. Archaeolog. Assoc.

"The fact that this well-known standard work has reached a sixth edition is evidence of its value to ethnologists and archaeologists. The many and beautiful illustrations are most helpful in better understanding the plain but accurate letterpress. Lord Avebury is to be congratulated on the new edition, which is sure to further popularise a fascinating subject for investigation by cultured people."—Science Gossip.

"It is necessary to compare the present volume with the fifth edition in order to see how much it has been improved. The illustrations to this sixth edition are immeasurably superior to the fifth."—Knowledge.

AINSWORTH (Rev. W. M.), MEMORIAL OF. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth. 6s.

BLACKBURN (HELEN). WOMEN'S SUFFRAGE. A Record of the Women's Suffrage Movement in the British Isles with a Biographical Sketch of Miss Becker. Portraits. Crown 8vo, cloth. 6s.

— See also Vynne, Nora, and Blackburn, "Women under the Factory Acts."

BROWN (ROBERT, Jun., F.S.A.). SEMITIC INFLUENCE IN HELLENIC MYTHOLOGY. With special reference to the recent mythological works of the Right Hon. Prof. Max Müller and Mr. Andrew Lang. Demy 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d.

— RESEARCHES INTO THE ORIGIN OF THE PRIMITIVE CONSTELLATIONS OF THE GREEKS, PHENICIANS, AND BABYLONIANS. With a large map of the Northern Hemisphere as viewed at Phœnicia 1200 B.C., and other maps. 2 vols. demy 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d. each.

— MR. GLADSTONE AS I KNEW HIM, and other Essays. Demy 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

CATALOGUE OF THE LONDON LIBRARY, St James's Square. By C. T. Hagberg Wright, L.L.D., etc. xiv + 1626 pp. 4to, cloth. 42s. net. Supplement I., 1902-3. Buckram, 1 vol., 196 pp. 5s. net.

"The present catalogue is essentially a working catalogue. . . . The general level of accuracy in the printing and editing of the work appears to us to be an unusually high one. . . . We heartily applaud the work, both as a landmark in library land, and as a monument standing upon a firm foundation of its own."
—The Times.

CURTIN (JEREMIAH). CREATION MYTHS OF PRIMITIVE AMERICA IN RELATION TO THE RELIGIOUS HISTORY AND MENTAL DEVELOPMENT OF MANKIND. Contains twenty long myths taken down word for word by Mr. Curtin from Indians who knew no religion or language but their own, and many of whom had not seen a white man until they had attained years of maturity. With an elaborate Introduction and Notes. Demy 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d. net.

ELTON (OLIVER, M.A.). TENNYSON. 4to. 1s.

ENGELHARDT (C.). DENMARK IN THE EARLY IRON AGE. Illustrated by recent Discoveries in the Peat-Mosses of Slesvig. 33 Plates (giving representations of upwards of a thousand objects), Maps, and numerous other Illustrations on wood. 1866. 4to, cloth. 31s. 6d.

ENGLISHWOMAN'S REVIEW (THE) OF SOCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL QUESTIONS. Edited by Antoinette M. Mackenzie. Issued quarterly, sewed. 1s.

GOLDAMMER (H.). THE KINDERGARTEN. A Guide to Fröbel's Method of Education. 2 vols. in 1. 120 pp. of Illustrations. 8vo, cloth. 10s. 6d.

HARRISON (A., D.Sc.). WOMEN'S INDUSTRIES IN LIVERPOOL. An Inquiry into the Economic Effects of Legislation regulating the Labour of Women. 8vo. 3s.

HENRY (JAMES). ÆNEIDEA; or, Critical, Exegetical and Æsthetical Remarks on the Æneis. With a personal collation of all the first-class MSS., and upwards of 100 second-class MSS., and all the principal editions. Vol. I. (3 Parts), Vol. II. (3 Parts), Vol. III. (3 Parts), Vol. IV. (1 Part). Royal 8vo, sewed. £2, 2s. net.

HERBERT (Hon. A.). THE RIGHT AND WRONG OF COMPULSION BY THE STATE. A Statement of the Moral Principles of the Party of Individual Liberty, and the Political Measures founded upon them. Crown 8vo, sewed. 1s. 6d.

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

- HERBERT (Hon. A.). THE SACRIFICE OF EDUCATION TO EXAMINATION. Letters from "All Sorts and Conditions of Men." Edited by Auberon Herbert. Half-cloth boards. 2s.
- WINDFALL AND WATERDRIFT. Verse Miniatures. Square 12mo, cloth limp, gilt tops. 2s.
- and WAGER (HAROLD). BAD AIR AND BAD HEALTH. Dedicated to Professor Clifford Allbutt. Reprinted from the "Contemporary Review." 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.; sewed, 1s.
- JOHNSON (E.). THE RISE OF ENGLISH CULTURE. With a brief account of the Author's life and writings. Demy 8vo, cloth. 15s. net.
- JOHNSON (Major T. G.). SAPPHO, THE LESBIAN. A Monograph. 73 pp. Fcap. 4to, bound in art linen, etc. 4s. 6d. net.
- KERMODE (P. M. C., F.S.A. Scot.). CATALOGUE OF THE MANKS CROSSES, with the Runic Inscriptions and various Readings and Renderings compared. 2nd Edition. 8vo, cloth. 3s. 6d.
- KIEPERT'S NEW ATLAS ANTIQUUS. Twelve Maps of the Ancient World, for Schools and Colleges. Third hundred thousand. 12th Edition, with a complete Geographical Index. Folio, boards. 6s. Strongly bound in cloth. 7s. 6d.
- WALL-MAPS OF THE ANCIENT WORLD—
- Wall-map of Ancient Italy. Italia antiqua. For the study of Livy, Sallust, Cicero, Dionysius, etc. Scale 1 : 800,000. Mounted on rollers, varnished. 20s.
- General Wall-map of the Old World. Tabula orbis terrarum antiqui ad illustrandam potissimum antiquissimi ævi usque ad Alexandrum M. historiam. For the study of ancient history, especially the history of the Oriental peoples: the Indians, Medes, Persians, Babylonians, Assyrians, Egyptians, Phœnicians, etc. Scale 1 : 5,400,000. Mounted on rollers, varnished, 20s.
- General Wall-map of the Roman Empire. Imperii Romani tabula geographica. For the study of the development of the Roman Empire. Scale 1 : 300,000. Mounted on rollers, varnished. 24s.
- Wall-map of Ancient Latium. Latii Veteris et finitimarum regionum tabula. For the study of Livy, Dionysius, etc. Scale 1 : 125,000. With supplement: Environs of Rome. Scale 1 : 25,000. Mounted on rollers, varnished. 18s.
- Wall-map of Ancient Greece. Græciæ Antiquæ tabula. For the study of Herodotus, Thucydides, Xenophon, Strabo, Cornelius Nepos, etc. Scale 1 : 500,000. Mounted on rollers, varnished. 24s.

KIEPERT'S WALL-MAPS OF THE ANCIENT WORLD—Contd.

Wall-Map of the Empires of the Persians and of Alexander the Great. Imperia Persarum et Macedonum. For the study of Herodotus, Xenophon, Justinian, Arian, Curtius. Scale 1 : 300,000. Mounted on rollers and varnished. 20s.

Wall-Map of Gaul, with portions of Ancient Britain and Ancient Germany. Galliæ Cisalpinæ et Transalpinæ cum partibus Britannicæ et Germanicæ tabula. For the study of Cæsar, Justinian, Livy, Tacitus, etc. Scale 1 : 1,000,000. Mounted on rollers and varnished. 24s.

Wall-Map of Ancient Asia Minor. Asiæ Minoris Antiquæ Tabula. For the study of Herodotus, Xenophon, Justinian, Arian, Curtius, etc. Scale 1 : 800,000. Mounted on rollers and varnished. 20s.

LAING and HUXLEY. PREHISTORIC REMAINS OF CAITHNESS. By Samuel Laing, Esq., with Notes on the Human Remains by Th. H. Huxley, F.R.S. 150 Engravings. 8vo, cloth. 4s. 6d.

MACCUNN (JOHN, M.A.). LOCAL PATRIOTISM IN EDUCATION. 4to. 1s.

MARCKS (ERICH, Professor of Modern History at the University of Leipzig). ENGLAND AND GERMANY: Their Relations in the Great Crises of European History, 1500-1900. Demy 8vo, stiff wrapper. 1s.

OTIA MERSEIANA. The Publication of the Arts Faculty of the University of Liverpool, Vols. I.-III. 8vo. 1899-1903. Each 10s. 6d.

RALEIGH (WALTER, M.A.). THE STUDY OF ARTS IN A MODERN UNIVERSITY. 4to. 1s.

RELIQUIÆ AQUITANICÆ: The Caves and Cave-Dwellers of Central France, with their Implements of Stone and Bone. By E. Lartet and H. Christy. Edited by T. Rupert Jones, F.R.S. Comprising 27 Memoirs, contributed by E. Lartet and H. Christy and others. 506 pp., 87 Plates, 3 Maps, and 132 Wood Engravings. 4to, cloth. Reduced to 30s. net.

ST. CLAIR (GEORGE, Author of "Creation Records," "Buried Cities and Bible Countries," etc.). MYTHS OF GREECE EXPLAINED AND DATED. An Embalmed History from Uranus to Perseus, including the Eleusinian Mysteries and the Olympic Games. Demy 8vo. 2 vols. 16s.

SCHLOSS (DAVID F.). METHODS OF INDUSTRIAL REMUNERATION. 3rd Edition, revised and enlarged. Crown 8vo, cloth. 7s. 6d.

"In its new as in its old form the book is well nigh indispensable to the student who desires to get some insight into the actual facts about the various methods of industrial remuneration, and the degree of success with which they have been applied in the various trades."—Manchester Guardian.

"More useful than ever to the students of the labour problem."—Political Science Quarterly.

SPENCER (HERBERT). AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY. See
p. 31.

— PRINCIPLES OF SOCIOLOGY. See p. 31.

— STUDY OF SOCIOLOGY. See p. 32.

— DESCRIPTIVE SOCIOLOGY. See p. 32.

STEPHENS (GEORGE). PROFESSOR BUGGE'S STUDIES ON NORTHERN MYTHOLOGY EX-AMINED. Illustrations. 8vo, cloth. 8s.

— THE RUNES, WHENCE CAME THEY? 4to, sewed.
6s.

— OLD NORTHERN RUNIC MONUMENTS. Vol.
IV. Folio. 20s. net.

THOMPSON-YATES (Rev. S. A., M.A.). SOCIAL DREAMS. 4to. 1s.

VEILED FIGURE (THE), and Other Poems. Large post 8vo, buckram, gilt, cover designed by Mr. T. Blake Wirgman.
2s. 6d.

VYNNE (NORA) and HELEN BLACKBURN, and with the Assistance of H. W. ALLASON. WOMEN UNDER THE FACTORY ACTS. Part 1. Position of the Employer Part 2. Position of the Employed. Crown 8vo, cloth. 1s. net.

WELD (A. G.). GLIMPSSES OF TENNYSON AND OF SOME OF HIS FRIENDS. With an Appendix by the late Bertram Tennyson. Illustrated with Portraits in photogravure and colour, and with a facsimile of a MS. poem. Fcap. 8vo, art linen. 4s. 6d. net.

"This is a delightful little book, written by one who has all the qualifications for the task—the opportunities of observation, the interest of relationship, and the sympathetic and appreciative temper. . . . We do not attempt to criticise, but only to give such a description as will send our readers to it."—Spectator.

"Everyone who reads the book will understand Tennyson a little better, and many will view him in a new aspect for the first time."—Daily Chronicle.

"It is quite worthy of a place side by side with the larger 'Life.'"—Glasgow Herald.